A WOMAN'S WAY.

"Pharisee" Thinks It Is Not Past Finding Out.

THEY COULDN'T RESIST A SLY PEEP.

The Widow Who Won a Husband by Kicking at a Hat—How Edwards Annihilated the Enemy.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 28th.

"Did I ever tell you of the fun I had at the Press Club reception a few months ago experimenting with female curiosity?" asked a newspaper man the other evening as we strolled about the water front studying the life of the poor man's club—the saloon. Two torn drabs had just reeled by, mockeries of womankind, and the conversation had drifted from them into a discussion of the amusing traits of the queerer sex. My companion is cynical, blase, and a believer in the pessimistic doctrine of Saltus. He gives much of his time to the study of the inherent evil in the female. So he went on to tell me of his experiment.

"You know at the Press Club we have one or two pictures which incline a little toward the nude, though there isn't a hint of the immodest, or suggestive in any of them. Then, too, in one room is a pretty bit of landscape, in which the human blight has been entirely eliminated. It is merely sea and sky and shore. This hangs in the room which, on the night of the reception, was allotted to the women as a repository for their wraps.

"Just before the guests began to arrive I slipped in and turned that innocent landscape to the wall. Then I sat around and waited.

"At first the turned picture obtained little attention. Then as the people began to circulate through the rooms and took in the other paintings, I noticed that shy glances began to be cast toward the suggestive, but irrelevant back of that work of art. Women soon got at the best possible angles and tried to peek at the hidden mystery. The leaven of curiosity was getting in its work. That picture was causing a feeling of uneasiness to pervade the entire assembly.

"Finally the entertainment in the main room began and everybody flocked there. I kept my eyes open. Soon I saw a stately blond girl, not over twenty, a look of heavenly innocence on her face, quietly leave the assembly and slip into the robe room. In just a moment I strolled nonchalantly by the door and glanced in. I saw what might be termed 'The Descent of the Virgin.'

"That innocent blond was just getting down from a chair and that picture frame was still wabbling. On the maiden's face was a look of cruel disappointment which is beyond my powers of description. She blushed when she saw she was caught, and as she passed back to the entertainment whispered, 'Don't tell! I couldn't help it.'

"She was the first victim, but, far from the last. I detected seventeen women, young, old, and middle aged, taking surreptitious peeps at that landscape before the evening was over. Then, before it was time for breaking up, I quietly turned the picture face outward and disappointed all the rest of the women who had previously been unable to sneak away from their escorts."

"It is only another instance of the innate cevilry in women," commented a rake at another club when I retailed the experiment of my newspaper friend. "Women can be led into almost anything, if you start them right. The most modest of them have a well-spring of folly hidden away somewhere, and it will bubble over some time and somehow, if they are thrown the least bit off their guard. Let me give you a companion piece for your picture on the wall.

"Last summer I spent some weeks at an ultra fashionable watering place. There were whole bevies of girls all the time and plenty of men on Saturday nights and Sundays; but during the week there were 'only a few of us left.' Of course, the remaining gallants had lots of fun, but the girls were hard pushed for amusement a greater part of the time.

"Most of the women were far and away above reproach. They kept right up with the proprieties, insisted upon chaperones on all sorts of occasions; if they flirted at all it was only in the most innocent way, and Jack and I used to refer to them as 'the nuns.' But in the crowd were three young misses of a devil-may-care turn, who didn't hesitate at long drives, moonlight strolls or midnight suppers. They were out for a good time, were bound to have it, and their mothers evidently had confidence in their ability to take care of themselves.

"Well, one afternoon Jack, these three Boydens, and myself were lounging in the shade of a rear piazza taking in the prospect. Jack ran into a story of his student days in Paris and the witchery of the dancing at the Jardin Mabille. In illustrating his tale he threw his soft hat up in the air, deftly kicked it as it came down, and landed it squarely on his head. Then one of the girls told of her seminary experience, when she had scored a higher mark on the doorpost of her room than any other girl in her class. Jack banteringly held up his hat, and to my surprise there was a quick rustling of feminine drapery, a flash of a slipper, and the hat was neatly kicked out of his hand.

"A ringing laugh went up from the crowd, with a lot of lively applause, and in five minutes all three of those girls were industriously pegging away at hats higher, higher, higher, with a desperate desire and a resolute endeavor.'

"But this was not all. The frolic and laughter attracted others. Girls dropped in one by one. Some tried to look shocked, but all were undeniably interested. The force of example was such that not one of a dozen young women who came to look on escaped a participation in the exercise. They were fascinated by the wickedness of it and couldn't get away. A few were young wives, and one the widow of a year. Some were o'er plump, some o'er slender; but all essayed a kick or two, careless of the consequent exposure of hosiery and the danger of a descent of the duennas.

"I don't know how long the frolic would have continued had it not been for a disturbing accident. The young widow, dark, statuesque, and demure, essayed an unusually difficult pas, lost her poise on the other foot, and went down—leaving little or nothing to the imagination. She covered her blushing retreat by saying she had sprained her wrist, and the fun was at an end.

I had something to say not long ago of the dangers of the Oakland ferry-boats to women, upon the principle that "Satan finds some mischief still for idle eyes to do." But there are other dangers which beset the path of the man who travels back and forth to and from his daily robbery of his fellow men. Hon. C. O. Alexander was endangered a day or so ago.

"During the war I was down in Virginia in a battalion of mounted infantry," said J. G. Edwards of the Coast Review, who sat opposite the Harbor Commissioner. "One day, with four comrades, I was detached by the commanding officer to strike out and set fire to a big warehouse some distance away. This warehouse was 300 feet long, 50 feet wide, 25 feet from floor to roof, and was plum full of hams. Yes, sir, hams," he repeated, as an interrogation mark began looming up in the kindly eye of his listener, who does a little something in that line himself.

"Well, we dismounted at a cotton gin, picketed our horses and reconnoitered. We found that that warehouse was guarded by 150 confederates."

"Then you beat a masterly retreat," interposed Mr. Alexander, who is not of a warlike turn.

"No, sir!" returned Edwards, promptly. "We had no orders to retreat. We got five bales of cotton out of that gin, crouched down behind them, and, rolling them ahead of us, advanced upon the enemy. We were armed with Sharp's eight-shot repeating carbines, and kept popping away as we rolled our bales ahead.

"Well, sir; we drove those 150 Confederates away from the warehouse and into the bush. By the time we reached the warehouse, however, there wasn't a place the size of your hand on any one of those cotton bales that wasn't perforated by a bullet."

"But how did it come that when you rose to fire at the enemy, they didn't plug you, if they filled the bales so full?" asked Mr. Alexander, that interrogation point getting more and more prominent.

"Oh, they only had single shot muzzle loaders; so we'd wait until they had fired, and when they stopped to load, we'd rise up and let them have it—eight shots apiece from five men. So they had to scatter."

"Then when you had dispersed them I suppose you set fire to the warehouse, and rejoined your command," suggested Alexander, thinking to bring the reminiscence to its natural conclusion.

"Not much; we did better than that. You see they might have surrounded us before we could get away after starting enough blazes, or they might have returned and extinguished the fire. But we blocked that game. We found a lot of nitric acid in the warehouse, and this we poured over the bales of cotton. Then we stole quietly away and watched developments from a distance. Before long the rebels came sneaking back. They saw those five bales of cotton alongside the warehouse, and, supposing that we were still entrenched behind them, fired another volley at us.

"Whew! There was the biggest explosion you ever heard. The air was filled with warehouse, Confederates and hams, all in small bits. You see, that nitric acid had made gun cotton of the bales, and the concussion of the bullets fired into them caused the explosion. We returned without the loss of a man."

By this time, that interrogation point had become a positive insult, and Mr. Alexander was in as much danger of annihilation as the warehouse. Fortunately, the boat landed, and the slaughter was confined to the Confederacies. But beware of the wayfaring reminiscence when it is loaded. It biteth like a blizzard and stingeth like a Chile pepper, THE PHARISEE.

EVIDENCE OF PROSPERITY.

Something From a Contemporary About Our New Press.
Examiner.

The EXAMINER congratulates the Oakland Tribune on the latest evidence of its growing popularity and prosperity. The Tribune's circulation has outgrown its present press facilities, and a new press has been ordered, and will be in running order by the 15th of May next. This addition to the press facilities of the Tribune will be of the very latest pattern. It is a Webb perfecting press from the manufactory of Walter Scott & Sons, New York, and will print, cut, paste in book form and fold 15,000 eight page papers an hour. It will print a six, seven, or eight column paper, and when it arrives THE TRIBUNE'S columns will be widened and the typographical appearance of the paper otherwise improved.

Revise Your Vocabulary.
New York Sun.

Words the swagger young woman must use nowadays: "chemist" for "druggist," "fancy" for "suppose," "stop attome," for "stay at home," "Function" for any kind of a social gathering, except a very gay ball, which must be called a "rout." "Drawing room" for "parlor," "smart" for "pretty," "sweets" for "candy," "very well" for all kinds of assent, "to tub" for "to take a morning bath," "clever" for "shrewd" or "knowing," "to Lent," for "to withdraw from the world for the Lenten season."

WORDS, WORDS.

The Hayseed Brand of Oratory Illustrated.

VAGARIES OF AN ORATOR'S INSECT.

Grady's Gorgeous Picture of the Great American Millenium—Some Perorations.

The other day at Stockton they dedicated a new courthouse and a statue of Justice, the address for the occasion being made by the Hon. James A. Louttit, who was, I believe, once upon a day, a member of Congress, or something of that sort. His impassioned but dulcet apostrophe to the goddess who presides over "the halls of justice" was very fine. I quote:

It would be a marvel and a revelation to some of our friends in the far East could they glance on this imposing structure reared in the land, where, in their misguided estimates of us, halls of justice are unknown, and the law of might alone prevails. A sojourn in our midst would educate them, for while we of this, our Western slope, admit that the bright sun of intelligence shed its first beams upon our brothers to the East, yet we do know that it glides swiftly with steps that make no sound along its path of golden rays to this Western Empire to gambol on our fertile plains, and to linger and to toy on our waving mountain peaks, yielding on them and to us its richest and its ripest beauty.

Who would imagine that, so sweet a strain could be inspired by a homely old hen of the plaster of paris breed? If the sun of intelligence is spending its expensive time toying with the mountain peaks, it is time for it to come off the roof.

I like the eloquence of the hayseed brand. There was a certain address of welcome to a fruit growers' convention, made by E. J. Griffith of Fresno, last year, which pursues one like a haunting memory, a dream of green fields and babbling brooks. Among other things, he said:

Life is not measured by years, but by experiences, realizations, and a rapid succession of ideas and events, sixty years beneath these skies, on these shores, yield more of life than eighty years in any State beyond the Rocky Mountains.

The butterfly, born upon a beautiful morning in June, that, with parti-colored wings, floats through the transparent air and sips the nectar from a thousand varieties of flowers, during one brief day has lived longer, when the sun goes down behind the western sea, and its life goes out, than the slow breathing turtle of a hundred years.

What a particolored butterfly is the Fresno clodhopper, sipping nectar of the tanglefoot variety. To be sure butterflies do not sip nectar, unless they happen to be of the boarding house butterfly sort. A bee might sip nectar if he could find it on tap, or a mealy bug (dactylopius adonidum), or the woolly aphis (schizoneura lanigera), or the cottony cushion scale (icerya purchasi), if he had not himself been sipped by the strutwing vedalia cardinalis. Mr. Louttit's sun of intelligence has not, as yet, produced any variety of poetry into which the codlin moth (caudopisces aristocraticus), or the plum gouger (coccotorus arkansawensis) fit nicely. And still the bray of the jubilant jackass sounds sweetly in the ears of Fresno and Stockton.

It is the note of insincerity which kills such stuff as that I have quoted. Contrast the lightning flash of the noble anger of a great orator. Thus Ben Butler to a New York mob that tried to hoot him down:

"Tramps of the streets, vagabonds of the highways, loafers of the bar rooms, thieves of the jails, felons of the penitentiary, pimps of the brothels, drunkards, blackguards, Democrats all: You shall hear the voice of truth tonight, even if I have to come down on the street and take your leader by the throat and choke him till his face is as black as his heart and his tongue hangs out like a flag of truce."

"Drunkards, blackguards, Democrats all." It has the force of a steel bolt. Of course he is an old political tough himself, but he would not sit down and write nonsense about the sun of intelligence toying with the mountains or the butterflies putting in their little bills for nectar.

The late Henry W. Grady had the gift of eloquence of the genuine sort, but there were times when he came perilously near the line which separates the sublime from the ridiculous. Here is a passage from his address before the societies of the University of Virginia, which many admire:

The world moves steadily from gloom to brightness. And bending down humbly, as Elisha did, and praying that my eyes may be made to see, I catch the vision of this Republic—its mighty forces in balance, and its unspeakable glory falling on all its children—chief among the federation of English-speaking people — plenty streaming from its borders and light from its mountain tops—working out its mission under God's approving eye, until the dark continents are opened—and the highways of earth established, and the shadows lifted—and the jargons of the nations stilled and the perplexities of Babel straightened—and under one language, one liberty, and one God, all the nations of the world hearkening to the American drumbeat and girding up their loins, shall march amid the breaking of the millenial dawn into the paths of righteousness and of peace!

This glorified nonsense is evidently an imitation of a much finer passage in one of John Bright's speeches, in which he records his prophetic vision of one great American nation possessing all of this northern continent. I am sorry I have not the passage by me, for it would be interesting to compare the diamond with the paste. The picture of the great American millennium streaming plenty at the edges and light at the top, is completed by the march of our fellow citizens on the dark continents, with the Bible in one hand and a bottle of rum in the other.

One might have supposed that this manner of riotous speech, that this profusion of impossible metaphors had been knocked out forever by Proctor Knott's famous burlesque speech on Duluth, but it seems to have an irresistible attraction. I myself like the sonorous periods of Grady's speech although they seem to remind me of the glittering hyperbole of a certain lecturer speaking on the "Great Fire of London:" "It is not too much to say, gentlemen, that when the news of that awful event became known, the Poles, north and south, leaped from their sockets, and stared aghast at the Equator!"

I offer you a more sane and stronger picture of a millenium, more poetic because more simple and sincere than that of Grady:

And perhaps far swifter than these, argosies of the skies will fly before the wind, revealing in very truth the angel of the Apocalypse, flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to every kindred and nation upon earth. Then will be justified our position among the nations and our inheritance of the truth. Then, perhaps, the long dream of the ages will be fulfilled. The Lord will come to take possession of his own. The four square city of our God, the New Jerusalem, the Mother of us all, shall be with men, and gather her children home. From her crystal heights the truth shall blaze across the world her banners of loyalty to Jesus Christ. Along her lifted wall Christian life shall walk, the incarnation of the "beauty of holiness." Within be sacred shadow a universal brotherhood shall arise; how sufficient unto all help fulness is that highest of all organisms, the church of Christ. Then there will be "a light upon the shining sea." Across that city of a redeemed humanity, earth's grandest outburst of hope and welcome shall break antiphonal from wall to jasper wall.

That is the peroration of a sermon delivered by Dr. Thompson to the Presbyterian General Assembly, of which he was Moderator.

If poor Grady had lived to learn the beauty of simplicity and the force of sincerity, he would have been as great an orator as John Bright. As it was, he merely stopped over Senator Evarts delivered last week, a speech on the Blair bill, of which I will quote the closing words, not so much as an example of eloquence as of the force of simplicity and honesty:

We are told that it, or perhaps all, that is needed to permeate and render alive and beneficial the action between the two races, either in politics or in social affairs, is justice. Ah, Mr. President, when did the human race ever learn to do justice except by education? Who can learn what justice is, not in the abstract or in rhetorical declamation, but at every hearth stone, in every court room, in every pulpit, in every market place? Who has welcomed from above the star of justice that could enlighten the human race except by following the method that the great and beneficent Governor of the human race has made, that they shall follow the precepts step by step as far as they could in these inculcations? Then, indeed, it may be that education in those regions of danger and difficulty and doubt and distrust may have brought out all a timid and living enjoyments—justice, that is safe against all the vicissitudes of human affairs; justice that is safe against growing old even with time.

One more peroration. There was a certain preacher whose eloquence was of the soaring style. He was accustomed to attempt the most ambitious rhetorical flights sometimes he completed them all right, and sometimes he didn't. Not infrequently he lost command of his vocabulary at a critical moment, and the result was disastrous to his metaphor.

One Sunday he was pronouncing a glowing eulogy on a departed saint. He raised him in a stately and resplendent progress step by step to the pearly gates. He almost had him safe in heaven, when he hesitated and seemed at a loss.

"And, brethren," said he, "and, brethren, he went in as slick as a mouse!" EDWARD F. CAHILL.

AUDACITY OF A RAT.

A Hungry Rodent Attacks a Man and Is Hard to Drive Away.
Pittsburg Dispatch.

Pittsburg, like other cities, has its rats. Whether Pittsburg has more than its share in proportion to population and territory is a question for social statisticians to determine. Whether, too, the rats of the Gas City differ from the rodents of other villages is not known, but one was discovered the other day that had the courage of its convictions.

A man was wending his way the other night, drunk or sober is immaterial, through the court yard in the rear of the Seventh Avenue Hotel, toward Smithfield street. He felt something dart at him and catch hold of the end of his trowsers about the heels. Whatever it was it clung to him with a tight grip, and looking down saw it was a large rat. With a violent kick he slammed the animal across the court yard against an ash barrel. It rolled over apparently lifeless, but it soon recovered and renewed the attack. The audacity of the rodent terrified its opponent, and the man in the case beat a hasty retreat.

He Blacked Them Well.
Chicago Inter Ocean.

F. T. Jeffrey, who has been selected as Director General of the World's Fair if it should be located at Chicago, began his career forty years ago as an office boy for the then General Manager of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, to whose position he afterward worked his way. His first task in that particular was to black his employer's boots. When twitted with having blacked boots his reply is: "Well, I blacked them well."

Daudet is a Dandy.
New York World.

Alphonse Daudet, probably the most popular living novelist is thus described: "Daudet is one of the most remarkable looking men in Europe. His head is one of great beauty, exquisitely shapen, long, dark locks falling over a white, broad forehead, eyes as black as any coal, but brilliant with the light of southern suns, the face itself a perfect oval, a full, dark beard and mustache and a delicate, finely chiselled mouth."

LITTLE JOHNNY.

The Red-Headed Woodpecker Inopportunely Introduced.

WHY POETRY IS READ BY THE MASSES

How the Wonder of the World and the Performing Bear Starved Out One Another.

Me and Billy, that's my brother, we was over to ole Gaffer Peterses house, wich has got a bald head, jest like eggs, and I was a tellin ole Gaffer about Uncle Ned had shot a red-headed wude pecker in a aple tree, and Missis Doppy she herd the story, and hern is red too, jest like fire. Then Billy he spoke up and said, Billy did, "Johnny, you mussent say nothing about red-headed wude peckers fore Missis Doppy, you havent got no manners."

So I was mity shamed of my self, and I sed, "Missis Doppy, pleas for give me. The wude peckers hed wasent real red, only jest obbern." But Missis Doppy she was fewrious mad, and sed for me and Billy to go home and mind our own biznesses.

Franky, that's the baby, has got a round head, and the horn todes bed has got stickers on it, but Mister Fred Emson Brooks, wich is the poetry feller, hisen is made out of lether. And now I wil tel you a story about him, wich my sisters yung man he tole me.

One time Mister Borux, wich is the Guverner's Private Secretary, he see Mr. Brooks, and he said, "I all ways liked you, and wonted for to do some thing for you, now if you wil wook me up a real nice poem, plenty of fire in it, I wil print it in my horse paper."

Mister Brooks he sed he wude, and that nite he set down to his table and twisted his 2 legs together and stuck his tung out and chewed his pen for to dash of some thing, but he cudent think of nothing and his heart was most broke. So he quit and went to the Free Library and got one of Mister Boruxes' long ago speeches, wich was printed in the horse paper, and he copied the perriration, which means the tail end, where the speech feller tries to be the eloquentish he kanows how. Mister Brooks he made it into lines of 10 silables and began each one with a cappitle letter and sent it to the horse paper. Mister Borux he pat it in the paper, but he wrote an editorial about it, sayin the folleria, but you mus xcuse the spellin, cos it aint mine:

"We print this morning some lines from the distinguished church sociable poet, Mr. Fred Emerson Brooks, not on account of their merit particularly, but because they illustrate in a striking way the fact that poetry is merely a mode of expression; the thoughts and sentiments expressed have nothing to do with the poetical character of the work. To the grace of Mr. Brooks' rhythm and the charm of his meter, every soul must be acutely sensible, yet cold analysis shows that the thoughts which it conveys are shallow and false, the sentiments unwholesome and ridiculous. In prose they would be simply disgusting and their author rightly considered an ass."

Uncle Ned he says wen the Republicans is in power, and has got all the loafers and offishes, Misher Borux is the remain stay of the party.

I ast my father wot fokes red poetry for, and he said, "Jest to see if it is printed like thay rwote it."

Then I sed, "But some of them dident rwite it," and he sed, my father did, "Them is the fellers wich don't read it."

But I have red Mother Goose thru, and Billy he says Adair Whelker, wich is the Sacramento Shakeper, stands mity hi as a poet and was a king in his own country, but the giraft it stands hi upper than any beest wich romes the plain.

Jack Brily wich is the wicked sailor and chews tobaco, he says one time wen he was a boy there was a show, and him and a other boy thay snook in under the tent and got in the wrong place, but thay wasent saw by the shomen. Bime by thay herd the ring master in the big tent say, "Now lades and gents, Mohand Ben Ally, the celbrated cheef of the Bedwin Arabs, will lead in the peerless giraff Jehossaker, some times called the Minaret of the Dessert, wich is the loftiest of all quadrupeds, save only the American eagle. He is so tall that all throw the mists and shadders may involy his feets, yet eternal sun shine settles on his head! Mohamd Benjamin Ally, lead forth, in the name of the Profet, the Minaret!"

But the Minaret he wasent leaded forth. Jack and the other boy thay cudent see nothing but thay knew some thing had went wrong, and bime by thay heard the ring master come a bustin in where the shomen waited wen thay wasent a showin off, and he spoke up, the ring master did, and sed, "Gum dast yure lazy skin! aint you the fore legs of the giraft?"

Then Jack he says thay herd them fore legs answer, jest as plain as any thing which was ever spoke by the yuman tung, "Yessir, but you wil have to go back to the oddients and make sech xcuses as you can think of, cos that dam galoot wich runs the snake show is a usin my neck for a tent pole."

Jack and the other boy that was offle frightend and tried for to run out, but they was catched and Jack he was kicked cruel by a Egiption mummy, and the other boy was most smuthered with white lead by the man which painted the royal Bengol tagger.

My father he says that the meanest sircus which he ever seen was the one where Misses Wooderth was the ring master. He says the tumblin was pretty good but the getting up again was a bad failer. I wasent let go to it, but I spose mebbey the pore fellers was hard worked and was too hard worked for to a rise. The Bible it says it is whicked for to not be kind to the workin man, and that folkes which is cruel has got to be burnt up.

And now I wil tel you a bout a strong man wich was the Wunder of the World and was part of a show. One day jest after he had held up a rock wich weighed 50 hundred tuns on the stummuch of his belly wile it was bursted with dynamite, and had pulled one of the enbalents hine legs off wich was a tryin for to make him budge, and had crush the skul of the buffio bull with his fist, he put on his cote an sed he be gum dashed if he wude wurk so hard any more for sech poor pay. The Livin Skelton herd him say it, and the Livin Skelton was the owner of the show, and he was fewrious like a feller wich has bit his self with a dog. So the Livin Skelton he sed he wude be blode if any hired man should tock that way in his show. So he fetched the Wunder a wack on the jaw, and kicked him real cruel out, and chased him thru the town in to the woods. The Wunder he dident dare to go back to town for fear the Skelton would lick him agin, so he wanderd a round in the woods a long wile til he got lost. Bime by he seen a frocious big bear and was so fritened he climbed a tree, cos the bear was a comin strate tord him. Then the bear it jest set down by the tree and looked up at him, much as to say the Wunder wude get tired the quickest. So the Wunder he stayed in the tree fore days, til he was a livin skelton his own self, but the bear it wudent go a way. At last, wen he was so hungry he dident know wot he was a doin, he picked a acorn, the Wunder did, and threw it down at the bear hard as ever he cude, and the bear it rored and jumped on the acorn real sabbage, and nashed it in its teeths, but prety sun it set down on the end of its back and made a lap and looked up and whined. Just then there was a Italian Dago wich had a hand organ come along, and wen he see how things was he licked the bear real hard with a strap and said to the bear, the Italian Dago did, "What fora you run awaya, hey? You tinka da gentman feeda you? You see he gota nothing for heselfa—have to sucka da bird eg."

And thats all there is about bears, except Mr. Pitchel, thats the preacher, he says thay et the whicked little boys wich sassed the profet Elijy. But Billy he sassed a flee to the biller and wasent et. Horses eats gras, and pigs eats evry thing, and cannibles eats their own selfs, and my sister she eats gum, but a cods liver nice fride is the king of beests.

GENESIS OF "THE HERALD."

How James Gordon Bennett, The Elder, Got His First Start.
New York Star.

Mr. James Watson Webb, about 1835, dismissed from his employment on the old Courier and Enquirer a brilliant young Scotchman named James Gordon Bennett for no good reason other than that Bennett was a cranky believer in cheap and sensational tuppenny journalism. In those days of six and ten-cent blanket sheets Bennett found it difficult to get employment elsewhere, and soon applied to Mr. Webb for reinstatement. But Webb, while refusing to re-engage him, gave Mr. Bennett the use of a small job-printing office he owned in Wall street, and advised him to start his penny paper. Bennett took the advice seriously and started the Herald on Webb's borrowed press and with his other loaned material. At the end of a fortnight he reported failure. "You haven't made your penny sheet sensational enough," said Webb. "Get out an edition tomorrow; lampoon the most prominent man you know; accuse him of all the crimes in the category, and that will sell it." Bennett again took the advice seriously, and devoted the first page of his paper next day to telling what an unconscionable rascal James Watson Webb was! Thereupon Webb cowhided Bennett, and pitched the Herald out of his Wall street job office into a cellar in Ann street, where the Herald managed to live by printing lampoons on Webb and all the other prominent men its editor could think of. His subsequent success is a matter of history.

Fight With a Lynx.
Lassen Advocate.

John Alexander had a rough and tumble fight with a lynx one day last week, down on Willow creek slough. He was looking after his traps and had no gun with him, when his dog engaged the ferocious animal in the brush. Alexander got an armfull of heavy rocks, and charged the enemy on horseback. The animal sprang at the horse, who suddenly wheeled and planted both heels in the lynx's body, knocking it end over end. The dog and the lynx then fought all over an acre lot, and Alexander finished him by a lucky blow on the head with a stone. The skin was tanned and brought to the Advocate office. It measured four and a half feet from head to tail.

Manned by Aliens.
The Philadelphia Record.

While the Senate is divided in opinion on the question of ironclads and moniters, there is apparently no difference about maintaining an aristocratic system of officialism which discourages American youth of spirit from enlisting in the Navy as seamen. Under this system more than half the seamen in the Navy are aliens and strangers to the American flag. Such a navy is American only in name.

The Talon Fad.
New York Sun.

The fashionable finger nail for men, as well as women, is extremely long and pointed, forming almost a vandyke. It has a claw-like effect, which is not very reassuring to the opposite sex, but, then, it is English, quite English, although it came first from Paris to London, and now it has reached New York.

A NEW RAIL.

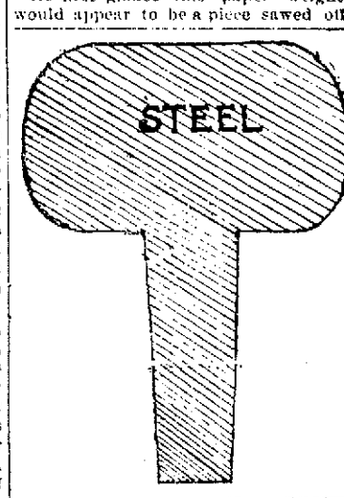

Oakland Men Owners of a Very Valuable Patent.

WILL FORM A COMPANY AT ONCE.

A Compound Rail and Telegraph Auxiliary That Will Revolutionize Railway Building.

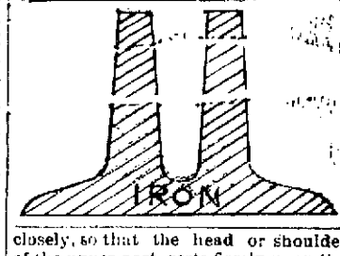

Down at Superintendent Wilder's office at the Oakland Pier, is a four-inch piece of railroad iron, which does duty as a paper-weight, or as a persuader to convince the obnoxious book-agent that the air outside, is much more quickening to his natural or affected gall, than the bottled-up ozone in the Division Superintendent's sunless quarters. In either capacity, the chunk of iron is equally good. It has just as much weight on the book-agent, as it does on Mr. Wilder's numerous telegrams and letters asking for passes "because the writer's brother's son's horse was once killed by a locomotive engine."

At first glance this paper weight would appear to be a piece sawed off the end of an ordinary rail, but it takes an experienced eye to discover that this sample is more than a plebeian rail. In fact it is a model of the Bargion compound rail and telegraph auxiliary—a rail that will one day be the only kind laid on the great iron highways of the United States, and one that will put millions in the pockets of the patentowners. The sectional views of the rail shown in this column will give an idea as to what it is.

In the first place the rail is made in two parts and in this respect it differs from the standard "T" rails now in use. The upper piece having the shape of the top and web of the ordinary "T" rail save that the flange slightly narrows toward the point, is made of carbonized steel. The bottom having the usual broad base, which the intelligent engraver has represented too small, with two bevel flanges into which the bevel flange or web of the upper part fits closely, so that the head or shoulder of the upper part rests firmly upon the flanges of the base, is made of soft or homogeneous rolled steel, which is almost impossible to break and is not affected by changes of climate. From this it may be seen that the Bargion rail possesses greater strength than the ordinary "T" because the shoulder or top of the rail is supported by two columns instead of one, as in the ordinary rail, thus preventing rocking, jarring or rattling, and adding greatly to the lateral strength of the web and to the rigidity of the entire compound rail.

The great wear and tear to railroad rolling stock is caused by the joints in ordinary rails, which sag as the car wheels pass over them, and cause that bumpety-bump so familiar to railroad passengers. In this new rail all this is avoided, and the trains will glide along without jar, as easily as a wagon on a bituminous pavement. How this is avoided is explained as follows: The joints in the upper rail and the base do not occur at the same place, but occur about where the center of the upper and the lower piece would be; thus the end of the upper rails occur about the middle of the lower piece or base, and vice versa. In this way the rails are laid so as to be practically one solid rail the entire distance of the road. The rails are anchored to the roadbed by means of a notch in the center of the lower rail or base, and a corresponding bolt in the upper rail. Consequently the contraction and expansion of each rail is segregated and independent, and all such movement is compelled to return to its initial point, and accordingly all accumulation of expansion is prevented and what termed "crawling" is avoided, and even on the heaviest grade or sharpest curve the rails will be perfectly rigid and the most serious contributor to railroad accidents is avoided.

Another point in favor of the new rail is the self-locking nut, which will utterly prevent loose nuts or the loss o

ts. As will be seen in the cut, the umns of the lower rail are not perndicular, and when a nut is screwed ht it pinches the column and cannot ssibly work loose. In fact, the rail peals directly to the pockets of the ckholders of the corporation, for ce in place the base need never be moved from the ties, and in case it necessary to substitute a new pper rail, one or two men can repair e track as well as ten or a dozen do w. All splices, shoes, and fish joints e done away with, and the cost of the pper rail is so much less than a new il of the old pattern that the annual ving to the railroad company will be ousands of dollars every year.

The track being practically one long ll the dangers from landslides and oods are done away with, as the rails ill hold the ties in place. And it is esnated that the life of rolling stock will e prolonged and the wear and tear reuced twenty-five per cent.

These, in brief are some of the featres of Superintendent Wilder's paper eight, but they are by no means all. It will be noticed, that the web of he upper rail does not fit clear down nto the socket of the base. It is proosed to utilize this space to place a ozen or more insulated telegraph wires , or a small cable containing a numer of wires for telegraph or signal purposes, thus, on long overland lines and p into the snow-belt, the telegraph ompany's wires could never get out of rder, and the vexatious placards, Wires Down," would not worry a elegrapher. Here would be a saving f poles, line repairers, etc. The very act that the wires "showed open" would inform the telegraph operators hat a rail had been removed or the rack was out of order, and many serious ccidents could be avoided.

These rails cost no more than the ordinary steel rails, while their life will be many times that of the rails now in use.

The Pacific Rolling mills have just completed fifty tons of the new rails, which are now lying in the West Oakland railroad yards, and fifty tons more are now being made, making in all one hundred tons which the Southern Pacific Company has given Superintendent Wilder and Division Roadmaster Kellogg orders to lay at once as an experiment, and work will be commenced next week. Some of the rails will be laid on the Oakland mole, others on the curve at West Oakland, where the overland trains turn upon the mole from Cedar street, and the rest of them are for the local road along Seventh street.

L. W. Kennedy was the agent for the rail in the United States, and owned a half interest in the patent. He interested a number of Oakland gentlemen in the enterprise, and both himself and the patentee have assigned their interest to V. D. Moody, W. P. Boardman, and F. Chappelette, as trustees for the subscribers to the test fund secured by Mr. Kennedy. These gentlemen are authorized to incorporate a company which will be formed soon. A number of prominent engineers who have examined the rail, among them Messrs. Alberger and Mendenhall, have pronounced the rail the biggest thing in the United States in the railroad line.

And this is what Superintendent Wilder's apparently insignificant paper weight is.

The Demand for Apricot Trees.

In an interview with Thomas O'Neill, this week, we learned that there never before was such a demand for certain varieties of trees, particularly the apricot. Thousands of old fruit trees have been destroyed by the heavy rains, the Vacaville section receiving a severe dose.

Taking Out Paint.

The Squirrel Ordinance Ignored.
Livermore Herald.

The squirrel ordinance passed last fall by our Board of Supervisors has received practically no attention whatever, at the hands of the farmers of at least this section of our county. It is probable, that the board will make a case to test the constitutionality of the law.

Wallace Everson Wants a Medal.
Livermore Herald.

Al. Fargo made on the Everson vineyard last season, a lot of Colombar wine, which he is training for exhibition at the World's Fair in Chicago. From these vines came the grapes from which A. G. Chauche made the Sauterne which captured a gold medal at the Paris Exposition.

Real Estate in Murray Township.
Livermore Herald.

During the past week quite a number of strangers have visited our town, looking for business openings and property, and we understand that, as a result, a number of large sales of improved property are in negotiation. We predict the most lively season in real estate matters ever seen in this valley.

Livermore Streets.
Livermore Herald.

Junction avenue was graded last week, and Contractor Beck is now working on Fourth street and East avenue, and Lizzie street. The good work will go on until Livermore has the best streets in Alameda county. The first grading was done in our town in 1881, and we will have accomplished the grading of every street in our town in nine years.

A Forestry Station in Murray Township.

At a public meeting at the Town Hall last Saturday evening it was decided to purchase ten acres of William Fath, east of town, for the State Forestry station, and H. H. Pitcher, V. Alviso, and W. H. Livermore Herald.

J. A. Bilz of Pleasanton secured on New Year's day a patent for a vineyard plow for working in old vines. It is built to run close to the vine, directly under the crown, without striking a spur. It is adjusted in a moment, plows close either way or may be used with upright beam for common plowing. Mr. Bilz is now making these plows, and is already finding a good sale for them. The saving in cost of hoeing by their use is a considerable item.

A Road to Mt. Hamilton.
Livermore Herald.

We learn from John Clark that the County Surveyor of Stanislaus county in company with a number of residents of Newman and vicinity, is viewing out a line for a road up the Orestemba creek from San Joaquin valley to San Antonio valley, and thence to Mt. Hamilton. The idea is to make a through line for tourists from San Jose to Mt. Hamilton, and thence across the mountains and the San Joaquin valley, by way of Newman and Merced or Madera to Yosemite.

Business Property.
Livermore Herald.

Another move in the Farmers' Union business occurs this week. This is nothing less than the announcement of the forthcoming sale of the "brick store" property by the Sheriff. The building is the finest in our town, is admirably adapted for the conduct of a large mercantile business, and cost much more than twice the amount for which it is to be sold. We expect to see this building occupied at an early date.

The Chauche Wines.
Livermore Herald.

A. G. Chauche shipped three carloads of wine to the city, from the Mount Rouge cellar, this week. Mr. Chauche's wine house is one of the oldest in San Francisco, and is doing excellent [illegible] in introducing and making known the wines of Livermore valley. He never loses an opportunity of drawing the attention of the public to their good qualities, and as one result, his Sauterne was distinguished by a World's Fair Gold Medal.

At the Bottom of the Creek.
Haywards Journal.

A peculiar accident happened to an eight mule team of W. H. Norris a few weeks ago, in Dublin canyon. A. P. Griffin was driving. The cargo contained grain and flour. When this side of the James place, in a narrow pass, in making a sharp turn, the wagon left the road and carried the mules with it to the bottom of the creek, a distance of full twenty feet. Strange to say not a mule was hurt, and the only damage to the wagon was the breaking of the bed. Next day the boys secured the wagon, and it had to be removed piece by piece. All the cargo was saved, with the exception of a barrel of flour.

Death of Miss Mamie Matthews.
Haywards Journal.

Last Wednesday, the 19th inst., death took from our midst one of the sweetest and most beloved young ladies of Alvarado, Miss Mamie Matthews, at the age of 25 years. She has been ailing for the past two years, with what the physicians pronounced to be malaria, but, in the end it proved to be consumption, and, last April, she retired from her position as forelady at Keane's dry goods store, Market street, San Francisco. The interment took place at the Catholic Church, Mission San Jose. The pall-bearers were Mr. Phelan, Mr. Ivens Lawson, Mr. John Barry, Mr. James Tearney, San Francisco; Mr. Oscar Nauert, Mr. Henry Steits, Alvarado.

The Road Across the Big Field.
Livermore Herald.

Jose Aurrecoechea is building a fence across the "big field" on one of the lines of the proposed new road from Livermore across the valley to the foothills. The opening of this road would increase the value of the great body of land lying between Livermore and the hills, and lead to the immediate breaking up of several large tracts of rich loam land, and its planting in orchards. Our best orchard land lies in this district, but it will never be planted till this great highway is opened. Side roads to East avenue on the south, and the Stockton road on the north, would follow, and the east end of our valley would soon be a populous district.

Additional Train Facilities.
Livermore Herald.

It is now probable that the proposed new afternoon local, which we mentioned last week, will begin running the first of the month. It is proposed to leave the city at noon, and arrive in Livermore at 2:30. Returning, the train will leave Livermore at 6:45, and passengers will reach the city at 8:40. This train will be run daily. We understand that the main object in putting on this train, will be the division of the business of the Sacramento train, which, in this county, has attained such proportions as to render the train slow and unwieldy. With the addition of this train, one can spend half a day in the city, and returning devote nearly half a day to business in Livermore. It will also enable visitors to our valley, to spend three hours longer here than with the present arrangement of our trains.

A MONSTER SLIDE.

Part of Collier Canyon Starts on Its Travels.
Livermore Herald.

A considerable portion of a hillside on John Armstrong's ranch in Collier canyon, five miles northwest of this place, started on its travels on Thursday of last week. It appears that a large spring has broken out this winter on a high hill across the canyon from Mr. Armstrong's house. This water sunk into the ground, and so permeated the entire soil of the hillside below that a piece of land fully a hundred feet in width and a quarter of a mile in length began sliding on the bed-rock. Mr. Armstrong saw it go. The distance traversed was not great, the opposite bank of the gulch temporarily stopping the flow, but the agitation of the soil was something fearful. Great fissures were opened, and enormous blocks of earth thrown upward, and the county bridge across the creek at that point, which, as luck would have it, stood almost directly in the path of the slide, was practically ruined. This bridge cost fully $250. The creek was effectually dammed, and as the earth is still slowly sliding down the hill, and pushing its head up the opposite slope, the dam is growing higher every day. Quite a pond has been formed by this dam. The bridge was pushed to one side, rather than broken, but cannot be used, and it will be useless to build another at that point. To cut the dam would also be useless at present, as the slide would soon close the cut. Mr. Armstrong congratulates himself that the slide occurred on the opposite side of the creek, instead of taking his buildings, as it was just as liable to have done. He also contemplates with complacency the excellent opportunity for duck-raising which the convulsion of nature has placed within his reach.

Mount Eden.

Farmers busy seeding.

Miss Melia Gading is the guest of Miss Boemer of Alameda.

The Misses Johnson of San Francisco are visiting Miss Annie Bothsow this week.

Our postmaster will depart next Tuesday for a month's recreation at Paso Robles Springs.

The acreage to be planted to grain around the Hamlet will be considerably less than last year.

During the winter months it has been almost impossible for all the children to attend Sunday school, but now that the roads are getting better and the weather settling, we hope to see the young people take hold, and infuse new life in the good work.

There are several dangerous places in the Alvarado road, just beyond the narrow gauge track, that daily jeopardize the lives of travelers, particularly after dark. These holes could easily be filled up, and we trust the roadmaster will do us a favor by attending to it at once.

The Mount Eden road, leading to Haywards, has nobly stood the past severe winter. Had not the Wood rock been placed on it, it would have been in a fearful condition, particularly from the corner of Hollister's place to the railroad track, most of which was several times under water. All it needs this fall is a fine coating of creek gravel, that will smooth over the rough places.

Dr. Horatio Stebbins of San Francisco, delivered his lecture Wednesday evening on "Men and Women." It was an eloquent and deep-thoughted lecture, which occupied the attention of all the large number present. The lecture was preceded by a vocal solo by Miss Florence Hathaway. The third lecture will be delivered by Rev. E. R. Dille, on Thursday evening, April 10th.

Mr. G. H. Hathaway and daughter Miss Florence, who have been on a visit to relatives here for a month past, started on their journey to their home in Fall River, Mass., Thursday. During their visit they have had a delightful time. On their trip out here the weather was what anyone could wish for on the ocean and most of our wet weather had passed before their arrival on this coast. Wednesday evening a large number of the friends of the family gathered at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. Hathaway to bid farewell to the visitors. The feature of the evening was the singing of Miss Hathaway, of which too much cannot be said.

Charles Bellina, who has been attending Heald's Business College, San Francisco, has just graduated, completing the course in five months, which is something remarkable.

Mrs. J. B. Johnson, residing on B avenue, is very low, and fearing that the end was near, all her children were summoned home the past week. However, there is slight hope of her recovery.

Morris Thomas, a wealthy lumber dealer of Duluth, Minn., and wife, have been visiting Mr. Liedell and family the past week. Mr. Thomas was brought here through one of our bird's eye views, and is so well pleased with the locality that he intends, later, in becoming a land holder.

Postmaster Bradford took possession of his new quarters, in Luce's building, Thursday. The quarters are a great convenience to the public, as well as a a credit to the town. Robert Leam, the lessee of the Jenkins Hotel property at this place, has named the house "The Cosmopolitan." It is being repainted and whitened throughout, and several important changes made in its interior arrangements. There are twenty rooms in the house, nearly all of good size. We understand that it is to be conducted as a first-class hotel.

Ronello Weymouth has on exhibition at the Post-office a scroll-work clock, which exceeds in size, intricacy of detail, and workmanship, anything of the kind yet shown by any of our scroll sawers of this valley. It is in the form of a cathedral, and bristles with towers and spires. It is forty inches in height, and is a marvellous example of what may be accomplished by ingenuity and patience. It must be seen to be appreciated.

Madison Beck has purchased of N. J. Dimond the latter's house and lot at the corner of Fourth and I streets, and of Joseph Walsh the lot adjoining, on Fourth. He also bought of Mrs. H. P. Jaccard a lot on Fifth street, directly in the rear of the Walsh lot. He will move the Dimond cottage to the Fifth street lot at once, and occupy it for the present. He will, in the near future, build a neat residence on the Fourth and I street property.

EVICTING A BLIND MAN.

Sheriff Hale's Unpleasant Duty on the Sobrante.

A Relentless Creditor—An Old Man Put Out and His Cottage Burned to the Ground.

Haywards Journal.

Sheriff Hale, Wednesday, had a very unpleasant errand to perform, but the order of the court had to be carried out. Some months ago William Stewart brought suit to secure possession of 160 acres on the "Sobrante," on which an old blind fiddler, named James Sutherland, has lived for fully thirty years. The land joins that of Stewart's and also James Ramage's and Joseph Lewis's. To make a long story short, Stewart lately won the suit in the Superior Court, and Sheriff Hale was instructed to dispossess the blind man. If there is a big-hearted man in this county, it is our Sheriff, and we can well imagine his feelings when he carried out the instructions of the court that day. He was accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Ramage, who is an old friend of Mr. Sutherland, and when they arrived at the spot in company with Mr. Stewart, the old blind man was visiting at the home of James Ramage, but there was smoke coming out of the chimney as though he had started dinner. He was soon found and brought to the cabin; and the order of the court read to him. He took the matter philosophically, but it was easy to see that it nearly broke his heart for this was all he had in the world, and, when he left the cabin, he was without shelter, and without a dollar, almost. To thus force a poor old blind man out upon the cold charity of the world was something Sheriff Hale hated to do. But, finally, Mr. Sutherland's things were removed, and the empty cabin and 160 acres left in possession of Mr. Stewart. Mr. Hale suggested to Mr. Stewart, that he give the old man the cabin, as it was worth but little, for he was now without a roof to protect him, but Mr. Stewart refused, and, when the party was some distance from the cabin, they looked back and were surprised to see it in flames, set on fire by Mr. Stewart, rather than allow the poor old man to have it. Mr. Sutherland has hosts of friends in this section who will not see him want, and the Supervisors will at once be asked to give him a monthly allowance. We will endeavor next week to publish the full particulars of this case and then let the people judge who really is entitled to the land. What makes a man who has the least bit of feeling in his composition mad all over, is that when Stewart first came here, we understand, a poor man, it was Sutherland who gave him a lift to prosperity. But after Sutherland lost his eyesight he was helpless, and this is the way he is treated by the man he befriended. This does not by any means end the case, for we understand that the friends of Mr. Sutherland propose to appeal the case to the highest tribunal of justice before they give up.

THEY FEAR THE OIL.

A Big Storage Tank Alarms the West Oakland Folks.

West Oakland property-owners in the vicinity of the Standard Oil Company's storage tanks and warehouse, which are located on the block bounded by Taylor, Seward, Pine and Cedar streets, are up in arms and propose to take proceedings to prevent what they believe to be a peril to life and property. Manager Watson, of the oil company, professes to be ready to stand prosecution in the courts for his alleged violation of the city ordinance which prohibits the storage of more than 1000 gallons of oil in one lot within the city limits, unless in a warehouse. Watson was given permission by the City Council to erect an oil storage warehouse on the block above specified, the building to be entirely fire-proof. It is asserted, however, by West Oakland people that the oil house is not fire-proof, having wooden flooring. It is also a special grievance that the company has put up a huge oil tank of 140,000 gallons capacity, said to be constructed of poor quality iron, but three-sixteenth of an inch thick. This is viewed with alarm by the neighbors, as it is not enclosed in a warehouse, and they protested through Councilman Collins, but did not gain any satisfaction. Some 4000 gallons of oil are now in this big tank, it is said, and the people say if the oil should explode, it would carry destruction over a large area of Oakland. The San Francisco authorities would not allow the company to erect a big tank on Berry street in that city.

The City Attorney and the Chief Engineer of the Oakland Fire Department have been appealed to by the troubled West Oakland people, who are anxious to have the storage of oil prevented. E. H. Watson, hearing that he was to be arrested, appeared at the city hall this morning and surrendered himself into custody, giving $20 bail. A. A. Moore appeared as his counsel later on in the police court and was given until April 3d to plead.

The Happy Jewish Home.

Rabbi M. S. Levy, last evening, at the Synagogue, delivered an interesting lecture on modern education. He referred to the danger of what he called "heart ignorance," saying: Children are not sufficiently trained to know the utility of the heart's noblest purposes, and of veneration, authority, love, honor, esteem, etc., are to be inculcated in the rising generation, see to it that ours be the duty to assist in this most laudable undertaking. Education, thus understood, has been at all times in great favor among our people. It is a common saying that the Jewish home is a model home, and filial affection a noteworthy feature among our people. Fearing ye may become unmindful of this beautiful heart training, I have been prompted to say these few words, and happy indeed will the father and mother be that teach their child that wisdom is greater than wealth, and a good heart better than them all.

Ready for Debate.

The Single Tax Club held a business meeting last evening when the question of securing a hall was discussed. It was finally decided to leave the matter of securing a hall to the Executive Committee, and when one is secured the members will be notified. In the meantime the members are ready to engage in a friendly debate with any individual or society on any of the current social or economic questions of the hour. The club offers to take the affirmative on any resolution declaring the justice or efficiency of the single tax, or it will take the negative on any resolution that affirms that a protective tariff is beneficial to the producing classes in the United States. Any desire to accept these offers may be made known to the Secretary of the club.

Dangerous Gravity Cars.

Since the killing of Mrs. West by the gravity dirt cars on Broadway public attention has been directed to the great speed which these cars attain and the danger to life and limb therefrom. The City and the County Attorneys are advising together as to the proper legal methods to be taken to compel the contractors to lessen the speed of the cars. It was in evidence before the Coroner's jury that the cars attained a speed of fifteen miles an hour.

SHE FLIES HIGH.

The Meddler in the Upper Strata of Society.

SHE SEES AND HEARS MANY THINGS.

Fair Maids Refined Who Will Married Be, and Others Are Not Equally Fortunate.

Of course you are carrying about in your pocket a bit of paper on which is graven: "Mr. and Mrs. William C. Little request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter Helen to Mr. William Henry Ketcham, on Monday evening, April the 7th, at 8 o'clock: St. Paul's Church, Harrison and Fourteenth streets, Oakland, Cal., 1890." I say of course you are carrying this about with you—if you are in the swim. But are you blessed with sufficient urging to partake of the subsequent wedding feast. "Aye, there's the rub," as Shakespeare triumphantly remarked, as he trumped his partner's ace. If you get beyond the church you are of the favored few, and, lay hand upon it, I would I were with thee.

What a picture, this, our Helen of Troy, in the veil and orange blossoms! Then, too, what a glory the church will be, with all the Easter decorations intact, supplemented by the wedding garments! The wedded pair will make their home at 981 West Seventy-fourth street, New York city, and will receive on Tuesday evenings, after May 1st. It seems too bad that such a handsome woman and such a pleasant entertainer should go out from among us, and that some of our own young men did not have the grace and courage to win the prize, but Ketcham seems a rarely good fellow, easy, manly, and no end an athlete. "They'll make a handsome couple," as the old ladies say.

I know but one who can at all compare with this bride of a few more days, and she will no more shine in society's realm to be the pole star of the young men's hope, for she is bespoken. Some day I will tell her name, or some night I may point her out for you, her magnificent black eyes gleaming from a box at the Baldwin, for she is much given to the theater, but for the time you must in ignorance and darkness dwell as to the one women whom I deem comparable to the lovely Helen.

Oh, the denials of Lent! Would they were well gone! I long for the day when the dear girls may again pause at the suffering candy stalls and indulge in their favorite caramels. Strange how maidens, careless in all things else, will respect the demands of Lent. I know one pouting beauty who will not let butter pass her lips during the days of dolor. Another keeps herself unpolluted of hot cakes; and a third allows confections to waste their sweetness unconsidered. But at best you are all miserable sinners, my pretty ones, for my good rector would have you all given over to that lean and hungry look which doth become a Texan steer driven afar into Arizona deserts; while you are all as fat and sleek as the kine of Pharaoh's dream or Phil Armour's slaughter pens.

Have you noticed Harry Haight's upper lip? That brave mustache has gone the way of all barbered things, and some of the girls are a-singing, "It surely will be missed." By the way, I am getting at the secret of Harry's undeniable social success. I heard a rippling belle say to the friend of her bosom the other evening: "I like Harry Haight immensely, but he does say such startling things that he almost frightens me." I don't know what Harry said, but any young man who can say things deliciously startling is sure of his way in woman's favor forever and a day. Just a smack of wickedness, you know. A man without it is like butter without salt, or mutton without the caper sauce.

As for Harry's brother Louis, I saw him at church on Sunday with two exceedingly pretty young ladies. I hardly know whether to credit the ladies or his inherent religious fervor with this bit of self-denial, for I know there was some lively tennis at one of the courts, and Louis is great on tennis. But the younger Mr. Haight seemed very attentive, of course, to Dr. McLean's discourse. By the way, after that admonition and the "O! Listen to My Tale of Woe," I thought it would have been very appropriate had Miss Fox and Miss Dyer and the Benham choir risen and given point to the wickedness of pilfering the first fruits by rendering "Johnny Jones and His Sister Sue." Somehow or other, however, such suggestions never seem to fall pat.

I hear something about a little dinner tonight at the Maison Riche. Brother Adams, with his never-failing generosity, is to have covers laid for six. Judge Philip Goldsborough is to be there, as a reward for his efforts to preserve order among the fractious spirits at the tennis court on Sunday morning. Alfred Clement, the cause of all the trouble, will be below the castor, and George, the man whom the people need, Comstock, the winner of the dinner, and Arthur James, of the Himalaya voice, will complete the company. There will be fun afoot.

Dr. Grant Selfridge returned to the eyes and ears of society during the week. He has been in New York during the past year, and saw some of our Oakland people, who are making themselves more or less at home there. Eugene J. Cantin is pushing Arpad Harasthy's champagne, and oh, the aching heads he is leaving in his lively path! I wonder why people will insist on calling Mr. Harasthy, "Liverpad?" But that has nothing to do with New York Frank Green is hustling about with a Mexican scheme of some kind, and seems to be doing well. The Greenes are living on Fifth avenue. Miss Lil he's health is not good. The climate does not seem to agree with her. Selfridge saw Chester Cutter in Boston last summer. Then the stalwart ex-resident said he was coming back to Oakland soon, but the next heard of him he was in Montreal, introduced as "Lieutenant" Cutter. He was seen again on the street in New York just before Selfridge left. Miss Jennie Dyer is doing well in art, and so is Miss Clara Methesney. The former has a large class of pupils and is also pursuing higher studies. Frank Lane says he is kept busy between his Chronicle correspondence and the entertaining of Californians.

They tell me that the Eothen Club is to give a dancing party at Washington Hall on the evening of April 10th, and I'm glad of it, for there's always lots of fun at the Eothen hops.

Mr. and Mrs. Eddington Detrick returned to Portland this week, and how do you suppose they went? By way of Omaha. How's that for "the longest way round's the nearest way home."

There is a rumor that Captain Knowles and his family contemplate a European tour. Mrs. Harries and her children will leave for England on April 28th. Mr. Harries will join them later. The Goodalls have given up their house and are at The Crellin. They will start for the East and Europe on April 5th, to be gone nine months. Last night Mr. and Mrs. Goodall were given a dinner by Mrs. Isaac Upham, at the Upham residence, 1157 Oak street. You know what a pleasant evening it was, because you know how charmingly Mrs. Upham entertains. Quite a company of the most intimate friends of the two families were present.

On Wednesday, the Hon. C. O. Alexander had a well-earned birthday. In celebration of the event, he was surprised by a little dinner party. The table decorations were of pink syrah, with violets for favors. Some of the birthday presents were preposterously unique. Those who aided in impressing Mr. Alexander with the importance of the occasion were: Mr. and Mrs. O. Alexander, Mrs. C. O. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hamilton, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Brigham.

I have been told by the little bird, which sings at my window when the sun gets up, that the day for Miss Elizabeth Folger's wedding had been put off, without anything definite as to just when it will be announced. Miss Miss Louise Rabe is soon to be taken away! Ah, me; how they go! Walter Kenney is trying to buy George Pratt's house on Harrison street, and I hope he'll get it. These are not all the family affairs which are known to me, but they are all which I feel come indubitably within the province of

THE MEDDLER.

A Reception at San Lorenzo.

On Wednesday evening last, the Rev. Dr. Horatio Stebbins of San Francisco delivered in Union Church, San Lorenzo, under the patronage of San Lorenzo Lodge of Good Templars, an interesting lecture on "The Two Halves of Human Nature—the Man and the Woman." After the lecture, many people went to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Hathaway, where a reception was given in compliment to Dr. Stebbins. Among those who enjoyed the reception was Edmund Hathaway's father, who, though in his eighty-second year, is still vigorous and hale. For two months he visited his son, and on Thursday last he left for his home, near Taunton, Mass. He was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Hathaway, who sang charmingly at the reception. While in San Lorenzo, she sang several times—at lectures and Sunday services—and always to the great pleasure of those who heard her.

Ringel-Frostholm.

Frank Antone Ringel and Miss Phenee Frostholm were married last evening at 1031 Eighth street, by Rev. J. H. Theiss. Mrs. Robinson and Mrs. Arbulish were the bridesmaids, and Mr. Robinson and Mr. Arbulish acted as groomsmen. The halls and parlors had been tastefully decorated for the occasion, by Miss Louisa Cordes of San Francisco. The bridal party entered the parlors at 8 o'clock in the following order, Master Walter Leydecker, following him came Maud Bremer and Florence Leydecker, as maids of honor. The bridesmaid, Miss Minnie Schoenau, attired in a stone color dress, and carrying a large bouquet of La France roses and Max Schultze, the bridegroom followed. Then came the bride who was handsomely arrayed in a robe of heliotrope, color and trimmed with lace. The wedding knot was tied by Rev. Dr. Funseling. After the ceremony the newly wedded couple received the congratulations of their friends. At a late hour those present repaired to the banquet room, where the wedding feast was served. A lecture on the life and character of Abraham Lincln, by Past Master E. M. Reading. The lecture was an excellent one, and was heard with attention. In closing, Mr. Reading said that, while the Union lasts its sons can have no dearer watchword in sustaining the integrity of their liberties than the name of Abraham Lincoln. Mrs. E. G. Stopped the Work.

One of the most inflammable fire traps in Oakland, as regarded by firemen and insurance adjusters, is the old skating rink building, now occupied by produce stores and other shops on the north side of Eleventh street, between Washington and Broadway. Phelan & Fish's extensive grocery business is carried on there, and the firm recently applied to the Council for permission to repair and make new wooden additions to their store. A committee favorably reported, and the work went on, but yesterday Chief Kennedy brought it to a halt until such time as the Council regularly acts upon the request.

Bids to Be Received.

The Board of Public Works will receive bids next Tuesday for a redwood box sewer along the right of way of the Southern Pacific Railroad, from the Twenty-first avenue sewer to the culvert and through the embankment at Nineteenth avenue; also, for a six-room addition to the Durant school.

Streets and Sewers.

The greater part of the street force will probably be laid off within the next month. Superintendent Wall says the streets are generally in good condition and he has all the caves filled in with macadam. Some old sewers need replacing by new ones, and others should be enlarged, and the Superintendent will so report to the Board of Public Works.

Where is William Revell?

About a year ago William Revell of York, England, met with financial reverses and fled, leaving a wife and large family in destitute circumstances. He is supposed to have come to America, and his sister, Mrs. Knelb of 174 Tenth street, this city, is anxious to ascertain her brother's whereabouts.

ILLEGALLY ANNEXED.

That is What the Courts may Decide in the Adams Suit.

Vernon Heights has been illegally annexed! The city of Oakland is not entitled to the territory recently taken within her bounds and the city tax collectors will have to refund the thousands of dollars collected from the people in that territory. If this is the decision to be rendered by the courts in the suit of Edson Adams against the city, the city of Oakland will be retarded in its growth and the councilman who was to be at large in that district will never roam through the corridors of Oakland's municipal building. There will then be only one way to get that territory annexed to Oakland, and that is, to have it brought in by the Peoples Express and Transfer Company, which checks baggage to all parts of the United States from your residence, besides doing a general express business. Telephone 326. Office 423 Tenth street.

A Joy For Ever.

Ask yourselves this question? Does it pay in the long run to buy a cheap grade of piano? So many poor and cheaply gotten up, so called pianos are sold, that really people do not know what to buy. But few know the real merit of a good piano, and customers are bewildered by the plausible stories of agents; and many are talked into buying a piano which in a few years is worn out. Be not deceived by fabulous low prices. A good piano like a good buggy, furniture, houses, made of the best material and by skilful mechanics brings a better price than shoddy cheap goods.

The Steinway & Sons' pianos are the best; after they have been used for 20 years, bring yet a better prize than cheap new ones. The Steinway piano costs more than any other piano, it is worth more and no one can deny this. The Wheelock piano is another piano which gives the best of satisfaction, hundreds in Oakland who use these for years will testify to their durability, sweetness of tone and general satisfaction. F. R. Girard, is sole agent for those two best pianos now in market. He employs no agents who go from house to house. Beware of such smooth talking fellows. Go and examine the large stock of those fine pianos, at Girard's piano house, Broadway between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, Oakland.

COTTON FABRICS.

Success of the Great Mills in East Oakland.

REPORT OF THE LABOR COMMISSIONER

Information About Wages, Product and Hours of Work–Cultivation of the Cotton Plant.

J. J. Tobin, Commissioner of the State Bureau of Labor Statistics, recently completed an exhaustive and interesting report upon the manufacture of cotton fabrics and cultivation of cotton in this State, referring particularly to the California Cotton Mills in East Oakland, the only factory of the kind on this coast. The report contains so much matter of important local interest that it is here printed in full:

STATE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
MARCH 26, 1890.

Cotton Industry of California.

There is but one cotton factory in California, in fact, there is but one on the Pacific Coast, and that is the California Cotton Mills, situated at East Oakland.

While the woolen industry has been on the decline, the cotton has prospered.

The ground upon which the factory stands covers six acres, and was purchased in 1883 by the present Superintendent, William Rutherford, at one-fourth of its present market value. He draughted the plans of the buildings and superintended their construction. The mills were set in motion in 1885. All the buildings, eight in number, are of brick and one story high. They present a front of 400 feet and a depth of 300 feet, and cover about half an acre of ground. The main building has a frontage of 330 feet and a depth of 150 feet.

The location is healthy, bordering on an estuary of the bay, and access can be had both by rail and water.

A visitor to the mill cannot fail to be struck with the order and cleanliness to be seen in every department. There are separate water closets for the sexes, and commodions well arranged toilet rooms for the women. The machinery, belting etc., are under the floor of the workrooms so there is no danger of the employes running risk of loss of life or limb by coming into contact with them. In consequence of the considerate manner in which the employes, especially the women and girls, are treated a better class of help is obtained than would be otherwise. The hoodlum element is happily absent.

The mills are owned and controlled by a joint stock company with a capital of $600,000 of which $350,000 has been paid up.

The following are the names of the nine directors:

George W. Beaver, President; V. D. Moody, Vice President; John Center, J. C. Ainsworth, M. Leventwitt, W. Rutherford, Superintendent; E. W. Newhall, E. C. Sessions, J. Y. Millar, Secretary.

The California Cotton Mills manufacture cotton sail, sewing, seine and wrapping twine; also carpets, horse blankets, sail cloth and rope, of various varieties.

Their specialty is, however, seamless bags, made either of cotton or of jute, or of both combined. Besides the foregoing they supply cotton batting, candle wicking, etc.

During the past year they manufactured 200 tons of small twine. The California Cotton Mills supplies the market in its specialties for all the states and territories along the Pacific Coast. There was for some time considerable cause of complaint on the part of the proprietors and employes of the mills that convict labor at San Quentin was not confined to the manufacture of grain bags, but branched out into lines that competed with them.

Fortunately for the California Mills, this is no longer the case, and the result has shown that a large trade has been developed in the manufacture of jute ore bags. In consequence of this, the factory had to be largely increased in capacity and in machinery. There will also be required a far larger quantity of raw jute than heretofore, so that the mills will become a cotton and jute manufactory.

To show how the mills have advanced in prosperity during its five years' existence it is only necessary to point out that the production in 1886 was $128,908 25, while in three years after, as shown above, it amounted to $286,955 18, an increase of far more than double.

Since it started the directors have been obliged to extend the factory building year after year, at the same time increasing the machinery and of course the number of operatives. At present they are putting in machinery for the manufacture of horse blankets.

One of the great difficulties met with at first was the want of skilled help. Out of one hundred employed only twenty had previous training. At the present time there are 190 employes in the California Cotton Mills, of whom 65 are men, 20 boys, 85 women and 20 girls. The wages of the men run from $1 65 to $3 50 per day; women from $1 to $1 80, and boys and girls from 50 c. to $1.

These rates of wages are considerably higher than what is paid in other states, and the result is that the superintendent receives applications almost daily from operatives in other mills, especially from the Southern states. The superintendent states that what they have most to contend against are the lower wages and longer hours in other cotton mills, especially those in the South. In the California Mills the hours are sixty per week, or an average of ten per day, while in the mills of Southern states they run from eleven to thirteen hours per day.

In none of the Southern States has cotton manufacture advanced so rapidly as in North Carolina. The number of mills has increased from forty-nine in 1880 to eighty in 1888. The capital invested is more than $4,000,000; the number of spindles operated, over 200,000, and they consume more than 30,000,000 pounds of cotton. As North Carolina is then one of the most prosperous in the line of cotton manufacture, it is fair to take that State as a test of the wages paid and hours of labor in Southern cotton mills.

From a table given in the report of the Labor Commissioner of North Carolina for the year 1887 the following is taken: Hours of labor per day from eleven to twelve and one half; spinning department, wages to foreman, from $1 25 to $2 per day; weaving department, from $1 50 to $2 25; assistant foremen, from 75 cents to $1 25 in the former and from $1 to $1 50 in the latter. Men get from 50 cents to $1 in different departments and women from 40 to 60 cents.

Here is a sample of a return from a manufacturer in Alexander county, North Carolina, "Labor is abundant, but not very reliable. We employ eight men at wages ranging from 75 cents to $1 50 per day, seventeen women at 33⅓ cents per day, three children at 25 cents per day. Pay wages weekly. House rent and fuel free to all employes."

From this it would appear that a woman operative in a cotton mill in North Carolina is paid at the rate of 3 cents an hour. In a large mill in Cabarmes county, North Carolina, employing 300 hands, the hours of labor are twelve per day, and the following is the scale of wages: lapper and card rooms, men, per day, 65 cents; drawing, 50 cents; women, 40 cents; slubbers and speeders, 60 cents, women, the same. Spinning department, foreman, $2; assistant foreman, $1 25; women spinners, 10 cents per side; doffers, boys and girls, 40 cents; spoolers, women, 40 cents; warpers, women, 75 cents. Quilting department, foreman, $2; women, 50 cents. Weaving department, foreman, $1 75; assistant foreman, 1; weavers per cut of 24 yards, 25 cents; twisters, men and women, 75 cents; folders, men, 75; balers, men, 65 cents; dryers, $1 25; fireman, $1; machinist, $1 25; watchman, 70 cents; carpenters, $1 25.

The following is the schedule of wages paid to the employes of the California Woolen Mills:

Head foreman, $4 50; assistant foreman, $2 50; lapper and card rooms (men) per day, $2 20; drawing (women), $1; spinning assistant foreman, $2 50; women 25 cents per side; doffers, boys and girls, 50 cents per day; spoolers, women, $1 75 per day (piece work): warpers, $1 35; weaving department foreman, $4; assistant foreman, $2 50; women (piece work), average $1 50: folders, men, $2; balers, $2; dyers, $3 75; firemen, $2 50; machinist, $3 50; assistant machinist, $2 50; watchman, $2; carpenter, $3 50; laborers, $1 50 and $2.

As was pointed out in the report, herein given, on the woolen industry of California, just as Eastern manufacturers can afford to mark their product below ours in consequence of paying lower wages, so the South, for the same reason, can undersell the East.

High tariff duties protect the wage earners of the United States from competition with the lower paid wage earners of Europe, but what can protect those in the Northern and Western States from the poorly-paid wage earners in the Southern States?

Nearly all the raw cotton used in the mills during the past year came from Texas. About 600 bales or 240,000 pounds of cotton grown in California, and costing about $25,000, were used in these mills. The superintendent found it a better article, upon the average, than what he gets from Texas. He is therefore strongly of the opinion that cotton-raising would pay in California. It would, undoubtedly, be of considerable advantage to the mills, as it would save them a large amount paid for freight on the raw material. If cotton could be bought from the farmers at home, the directors of the California Cotton Mills could defy competition from any Southern manufacturers, notwithstanding the lower rates of wages they pay to the operatives in their mills.

Small pamphlets showing the advantages of cotton-growing have been widely distributed among the farmers of the State. That cotton can be successfully and profitably grown in California is no longer a matter of doubt and speculation.

It can readily be seen, from the facts herein given relative to the hours of labor and rates of wages paid in the cotton mills of the Southern States, as compared with our own, how impossible it would be for any cotton mill in California to compete with the former, except on this Coast. Even, at present, manufacturers at Nashville, Tennessee, are able to pay the heavy freight on cotton rope from that long distance and undersell the California Company at their own doors.

It is the opinion of the Superintendent that the Inter State Commerce bill was a boon to the cotton industry of California. It is, to a large extent, a barrier to the ruinous competition of Eastern and Southern manufacturers. Were it not for it, through special rates, they could flood the markets here, and no cotton mill could run in California.

According to Professor Hilgard, of the State University, "Cotton has been successfully grown within the State, all the way from the Mexican boundary to Shasta county, and the staple produced has, on the whole, proved to be of peculiar excellence." The Professor then goes on to prove that cotton culture should commend itself to the farmers of California. First, since the production for the home market has steadily been maintained and has proved profitable, it is legitimate to infer that wherever, by the establishment of cotton factories on the Coast, the local demands shall increase, cotton production will do the same.

Other causes are, the relation of culture to the peculiarities of the soil and climate, especially of the great valley.

Superintendent Rutherford says that several of the farmers of the State who have tried the experiment of cotton culture have been gratified at the result. Among others, he refers to Mr. Davis, of Madera, who planted 200 acres in cotton, and succeeded better than he would in wheat. Cotton has been grown successfully in the great Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, and in nearly every portion of the State which is protected from raw, cold winds and fogs. The latter are very detrimental to cotton growing. Cotton should be grown where it is warm, the hotter the better, so long as moisture is procurable by the roots, which grow quite deep, or is supplied by irrigation.

Along the lower foothills and in the counties of Napa, Sonoma, Lake, Tulare, Kern, Merced, and San Diego fine cotton has been recently grown, which places its successful culture beyond experiment.

One of the greatest objections to cotton planting in California is the supposed scarcity of labor for cultivating and picking. This objection is not so real as it may seem at first sight, the facts being that cotton planting and culture require no more labor than does the culture of corn; and the picking costs less than the picking of grapes or fruits of any kind.

Cotton picking, which comes on in the months of October, November, and December, could utilize the same laborers who were employed during the summer months in the orchards and vineyards. This would, to some extent, solve one of the problems agitating the public mind, "What shall we do with our farm laborers after the harvest has been gathered in?"

The farmer who plants cotton on a portion of his land will find work for his laborers after his fruit has been picked or his corn gathered in. There would no longer be such an exodus of the genus tramp farm laborer from the country to the large cities during the winter months. The citizens of San Francisco would not be obliged to pass the hat around for the relief of the unemployed. Land owners would then feel more disposed to provide a local habitation for the men who would toil for them, not only during the heat of summer, but also during the cold of winter.

But then the question may be asked: How could California hope to compete with Texas, which has had such a long start ahead of her and which now produces more cotton than any other state in the Union? The estimated value of her cotton crop for the present year is one hundred millions. The answer to this is given by Professor Hilgard, who says:

"The California cotton grower has this great advantage over his Southern competitor: The latter has to fight the grass' throughout the season, in fact to keep the cotton 'out of the grass' is his never-ending task. In California there are no summer showers to start a new crop of grass and compact the surface of the soil into a strangling and moisture-wasting crust. If kept clean to the dry season, the ground remains clean, save perhaps a few straggling weeds that can be easily cleared away by a few strokes of the hoe. There is no crab-grass to go to seed every autumn as an earnest of the perennial renewal of the grass fight."

If the farmers of this State were to devote a portion of their lands to cotton growing they could find a ready market at the California Cotton Mills, the directors of which, the Superintendent assures me, are willing to give a written guarantee if necessary that they will pay the quoted prices of the New Orleans or Galveston Chamber of Commerce. This would remove one of the objections which farmers raise, viz: That as we have but the one cotton manufactory in California they would be compelled to accept any price the proprietors chose to offer them. As they say, they are afraid of being "cinched." There would be a demand for the current year at the California mills for about 5000 bales of cotton or from two to three million pounds at from ten to twelve cents.

Another objection made against cotton growing by California farmers, is that there is too much bother in attending to it. According to the opinions of several who have had experience in the matter, the cotton crop gives far less "bother" than hops or fruits or vines.

The California Mills Company have lately distributed two car-loads of upland cotton seed to the farmers of the State, in order to induce them to try the experiment of cotton growing, in the full confidence that it will redound to their mutual advantage.

Commissioner.

What It Cost.

The re-macadamizing of Eleventh street, from Broadway to Washington street, just completed, cost $989 75, or $1 65 a foot. This block of street is undoubtedly the most used of any in the city, and that macadam should be the pavement is unfortunate.

PERILS OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

A Piano Agent Who Downed a School and Then Got Downed.

New York Sun.

I was riding through the country west of Pekin, Ill., with an organ and piano agent, when we came to a schoolhouse one evening, and found a spelling school in progress. The agent suggested that we stop for awhile, adding: "If I can't spell the whole school down, then I don't want a cent."

There was a big turnout, and the master at once invited us to take a hand. I had been there before, and politely declined. The agent, however, went into the ranks with great enthusiasm, and in the course of fifteen minutes had downed all but twelve. Then I overheard growls and threats and muttering from half a dozen young men, and knew that he was galloping to his doom. Five minutes later there were only six up, and at the end of another five minutes the agent and the belle of the school stood alone. The mutterings grew louder and more men eying and I decided to slip outdoors.

I was unhitching the team when there came a loud cry, followed by a succession of crashes, and a crowd poured out through the door. The agent was being dragged by the hair of the head, and as soon as well out into the yard they rolled him down a bank into the creek. I got out with the team by the skin of my teeth, and, reaching the town, at up all night for the agent. He came in about daylight, clothing in rags, eyes bunged up, two fingers broken, and going lame in both legs, and, as he fell into a chair, he exclaimed:

"Before using and after using! I first downed the school, and then the school downed me, and I'll be hanged if I'll ever spell another word according to Webster in my life."

TWELVE-PAGE EDITION.

A Bishop's Plan.

Bishop Potter has written an interesting paper for the New York Tribune about the drift of young men from the country to the big cities, in which he devotes considerable attention to the means for providing such young men with a better equipment for the struggle that is before them. He does not directly consider their equipment for the purpose of making money, but rather for the further and more prolonged enjoyment of such faculties as they may possess. At the start he falls into the easy and fashionable groove of assertion that Americans in the cities work too hard and undergo too severe a nervous strain. Of the methods of work of the urban business man he says:

He is running himself on a schedule, and the demand upon him all the while is to crowd just a little more work, or "sport," or excitement, into the day than his nervous machinery will stand. And so presently, the machine goes to pieces. The man gives out as to his brain, or his stomach, or some other organ—sometimes gradually, oftener suddenly, but almost always before his time.

Of course there are cases where the worry and anxiety of business have killed men before their time, but we believe they are rare. As for working on a schedule, there is nothing more healthy in the world, and the man who was killed by overwork has not yet been discovered, in the cities at least. The sordid grinding toil of the farm and the stock rouge, combined with exposure, has often injured a man's health, but a full schedule of mental work and recreation is about as healthy a regime as can be prescribed under ordinary circumstances. The proof lies in the fact that the city dwellers, despite the sedentary nature of their occupations, live as long, on the average, as the men who work on the farm. Bishop Potter seems to feel that this is true, for he proceeds to find a better reason for the indifferent health, which appears to be the lot of so many Americans, whether they dwell in the cities or in the country. This is the mistaken ideas as to diet, which are so prevalent, and the ignorance of the parents, as well as of their children, of what may be eaten without producing constitutional deterioration. This is a large reason for failure in city life, and it has more force, perhaps, in the case of the country-bred boy, because in the country the ignorance is more dense on these points. No matter how well qualified, or how successful a young man may be, he is unable to enjoy his success if he has destroyed his stomach in early life. Therefore, Bishop Potter would supply some means of instruction in the laws of health which might be made available for country boys, as well as those of the cities. To supply the means of culture, without which mere monetary success is of little value, Bishop Potter suggests the creation of a vast system of circulating libraries, distributing books all over the country, and we have no doubt that in connection with some institution like the Chautauqua circle as a guide to the tangled paths of literature, every boy might work out for himself a very fair imitation of university education with the help of such a system. Lastly, he asks rich men to build and endow country churches. A handsome architectural structure under the management of a man of light and leading, is in itself a most important means of culture and elevation of spirit.

THE base uses to which the institution of the Grand Jury may be put by malicious or designing men are well illustrated by the recent proceedings in San Diego. The jury there indicted a Superior Judge on a charge of mutilating records simply because he or his clerk had lost or mislaid some papers filed in a suit. This is the same jury that advised that a woman who had shot down a man in open court be not prosecuted because they conceived that she was avenging her honor. Of course, the man who wronged her was worthy of punishment, but as for the woman, if she had thought as highly of her honor before she lost it as she seems to have done since, she would not have found herself in that unfortunate plight.

ONE sometimes wonders if the Fish Commissioners are good for anything in the way of policing the waters of the State beyond the arrest of an occasional Chinaman. It is a notorious fact that the dynamiting of the streams and pools for trout goes on continually, without any notice taken by the Commissioners, or even the slightest attempt at the enforcement of the law. The latest instance of their neglect is their allowance of the catching of the young striped bass, which are just beginning to establish themselves in considerable numbers in the waters of the bay and along the coast. The small fry of this magnificent game fish are now killed in thousands in the waters of the Sacramento, and, at the present rate of the catch, they will soon be exterminated. It is only a few years since the first of these fish were planted in these waters, but if the fry are allowed to be caught by the use of nets of a smaller mesh than the law authorizes the planting will go for naught.

THERE used to be a theory, of some acceptance, that a cyclone, being a storm of electrical origin, would not be likely to do much damage in a city, for the reason that the spires and other tall buildings would discharge the electrical energy of the storm and carry it to the ground. If the tremendous storm which visited Louisville was of this sort, the theory in question is set at rest forever. The theory, however, never rested on any observed facts, and was merely idle speculation, probably growing out of the accident that the large cities had been lucky enough to escape the ravages of these destructive storms. The Louisville storm was probably not a cyclone, however, because its path was wider than is usually the case with such elemental disturbances. Leaving considerations of this sort on one side, the duty of the hour is to come to the relief of the sufferers as speedily as may be, and we feel confident that Oakland will not be backward in this regard.

PASADENA property is being assessed at a reduction of 55 per cent. on last year's figures. We believe that the coming assessment and the census will show that Alameda county is the second in the State in point of population and wealth. The city of Los Angeles is full of empty houses, and the falling off in population has been very considerable, while we have been growing steadily. The inflation of the boom values has subsided, while Alameda county has been adding to its wealth by building railroads and houses, and an unprecedentedly large planting of fruit trees.

IT furnishes an unfortunate commentary on the habits of the people that nobody connected with an assessor's office can be employed as a census enumerator. It appears to be an accepted fact that even the most (otherwise) virtuous man will lie to an assessor, and further, that he cannot divest himself of the habit even when the assessor has assumed another office.

As Seen From New York.

New York Sun.

The California followers of a seer named Ericksen are offering some excellent bargains in real estate. The prophet insists that New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Oakland are to be destroyed by inundation and earthquake on April 14th. The Ericksonians of Oakland are disposing of their real and personal property at a great sacrifice, as they expect to leave town in about three weeks. But as yet there are no signs of a depression in the real estate market of the other three cities. In particular, the New Yorkers object to moving before the 1st of May.

CURRENT POLITICS.

The Washington correspondent of The Wasp says: Representative McKenna, as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, is giving close attention to the matter of proposed tariff changes. He will undoubtedly make a good showing to secure adequate protection of California interests and products, notably lumber, raisins, prunes, oranges, chicory, borax, quicksilver. The efforts to place sugar on the free list, or reduce the duty, have been strenuously opposed by those desiring to encourage the production of beet sugar in California and other States. However, it need surprise none if the present rate is reduced by about 35 per cent, and in this connection it may as well be understood that the principles of protection seem more firmly rooted in the Senate than in the House.

The Haywards Journal says, Frank Fowler and A. C. Vandervort, of Murray township, are in the field for Public Administrator. Haywards is liable to trot out a candidate for County Auditor in a few weeks.

The farmers and fruit growers are necessarily interested in the selection of the very best man for the Legislature this year. Questions will come up that are of vital interest to them, particularly the question of taxation, and it seems to us that a consultation should be held to discuss the matter, and endeavor to pick out the ablest men we have, whose names could be presented to the convention. Such a gathering of representative men would naturally have weight, and we suggest that a meeting be called in the early future to discuss our wants. Haywards is a central place and we see no reason why our Fruit Growers' Association could not take up the subject, and have the farmers co-operate with them.

They tell a good story of how W. B. Mosher of Pasadena secured his appointment as Supervisor of the United States Census for the Fifth District. Several months ago the gentleman filed a written application for any work that might be offered him in connection with the collection of the census. Recently, when the question of appointing the Supervisors for California came up, gentlemen who dispense the Federal patronage in this neck of the woods, united in recommending the appointment of R. L. Mosher, a Los Angeles politician. By some mistake the authorities at Washington got the two Moshers mixed, and to the surprise of the Pasadena Mosher, and to the great discomfiture of the Los Angeles Mosher, the man without any political influence got the place.—The Wasp.

A POETIC SOUL.

A Man Like Heine, the Saddest of Humorists.

AUTHOR OF THE CENTENNIAL ODE.

H. Clay Wysham's Recollections of That Sweetest of the Sons of Georgia, Sidney Lanier.

In a leading society weekly of New York, the Home Journal, of a late issue, is contained a tribute to Sidney Lanier, written by H. Clay Wysham. This is a "memory" of the few short years in the late career of the poet, when, amid difficulties which seemed almost insurmountable, he performed a prodigious quantity of work. In the John Hopkins University, where he had a chair, his specialty was language and history, upon both of which subjects he published some valuable works.

Mr. Lanier was a most exquisite player upon the flute and a gifted musician, to which side of his character Mr. Wysham pays this poetic and tender tribute:

"To him, whose soul was like an enchanted instrument—a magic flute, needing but a breath to set it vibrating—it was indeed inevitable that he should find expression and solace in the gentle and penetrative music of the flute, for there was a spiritual correspondence with it in his nature. In his hands the flute no longer remained a mere material instrument, but was transformed into a voice that seemed to set free the heavenly harmonies. Its tones developed warmth, colors and an undertone of unutterable poetry and often of mysterious sadness. His playing appeared alike to the musically learned and to the unlearned. The artist felt in his performance the superiority of the living inspiration to all the rules and shifts of mere technical scholarship. His art was not only the art of art, but an art above art. His new instrument, the silver Boehm, was welcomed with delight and enthusiasm, and he seemed never so happy as when he would

Commend this flute,
whose music, winding thro' the stops, upsprings
To make the player very rich.

"Art he served with a high and holy respect. His mere executive work in the Peabody orchestra was done with a carefulness and precision worthy of a veteran of the band, and his sole aim, regardless of the temptation ever to express one's self, was to seek the composer's meaning; this done, he merged his individuality and became a part of the marvelous machinery in the technical mysteries of orchestration. His attitude in listening to the music was usually a bent, reverent posture, with folded arms and closed eyes—a study of profound meditation and intense absorption."

Mr. Wysham also gives a reminiscence of the poet's peculiar view, and likens him to Heine, who was the saddest of humorists.

"Through a vista of now well nigh twenty years, memory recalls the shudder caused by his first letter in reply to a suggestion from him who now records these sad, sad years of the 'Grief of Art,' to join the musical forces of the conservatory, and how it opened with a grim, almost ghastly simile of 'A Certain Miss Death' and her coquettries, and her 'fan of a raven's wing.' Like Heine, too, in the intervals of disease in later days, harassing as they were, he wrote the finest and most finished of all his poems. It was from his 'mattress grave' he produced his 'Hymns of the Marshes,' the most matured, scholarly and poetic of all his works.

Reverend Marsh, low couched along the sea,
Old chemist rapt in alchemy
Distilling silence—Lo!

"These hymns, the swan songs of the dying poets, he sang like a bird to the accompaniment of a harp. In the 'Marshes of Glynn' he expresses his unfaltering faith in God, his 'steadfast firmament in blue.'

'As the marsh hen secretly builds on the the watery sod,
Behold I will build me a nest on the greatness of God.
I will fly in the greatness of God, as the marsh hen flies
In the freedom which fills all the space 'twixt the marsh and the skies.'

"And in his 'Sunrise in the Marshes,' not as in Manfred's apostrophe, does he ask:

And thou fresh-breaking day,
Why are ye beautiful? I cannot love ye.
And thou, the bright eye of the universe,
That openest over all and unto all,
Art a delight—thou shin'st not on my heart.

The grandeur of his faith rose in glad prayerful psalms of joy, in kindly salutation, thus:

The sacramental marsh one plons plain
Of worship lies! Good morrow, Lord Sun!
With several voices, with ascription, one,
The woods and the marsh, the sea, and my soul
Unto thee, whence the glittering stream of all morrows doth roll.
Dry good, and past good, and most heavenly morrow! Lord Sun!

The death of the poet is most touchingly described:

"Bring me my sad-colored doublet to-day, quoth Sir Percy," he oft would say, and throughout these late distasteful days, toiling and suffering to the last, the sad, the saddest color was his daily garb. The battle for bread and life, the weariness and waste, the rapid returns of illness, care and continual disappointment; art efforts and aspirations all clogged and dispersed; hopes ever springing and ever doomed—at last the soul of the artist lets its fragile clay and his battle of life was done.

As Chopin, to whom he has been likened, died, so he, of the same ever-flattering, ever-fatal malady, and at the same age, each a little lacking forty years. Love was his life, and she, the devoted wife, was both to him, ministering in offices a thousand times more efficacious than the material remedies known to medicine. He died as he lived—in loving.

* * * * *

Back again to the old Georgia home she bore him, to sleep, among the flowers he loved, the last long and dreamless sleep, "where the wild plants hide and the oak fragrances vanish," and among "his feathered friends of the forest" he loved so well.

To breathe my loss is more than fame,
To utter love more sweet than praise.

TWO SUCCESSFUL CONCERTS.

A Sunday School Orchestra and a Piano Fund Benefit.

The concert given by the Sunday School Orchestra at the First Congregation Church last evening was a brilliant success. The attendance was large and the music rendered by the orchestra was of an exceptional order of excellence. It had been arranged that Miss Mary Fox and Miss Alice Dyer should be the vocalists, but Miss Dyer was taken sick yesterday and Miss Fox could not be present on account of the death of a relative. Mrs. W. J. Batchelder of Alameda had been secured as a substitute for Miss Fox, but she too became ill, and Miss Sophie Newlands took her place, rendering "Knowest Thou the Fair Land," from Mignon, and "Dearest Mother" (Mayer-Helmund with splendid effect. Notwithstanding the disappointments with regard to the other singers, the excellent orchestration was ample compensation.

Another, and equally successful, concert last evening was that given at the First Baptist Church, for the benefit of the piano fund of the California College. The entertainment was under the direction of H. B. Pasmore, and the large audience was given a rare musical treat. The following, who constitute the musical faculty of California College, took part, assisted by other artists, who are friends of the institution: H. B. Pasmore, vocal, organ, and composition; Madam Otto Blankart, piano; John A. Pratt, F. A. C. M., harmony, counterpoint, and fugue; Otto Blankart, violin; Mrs. H. B. Pasmore, assistant vocal. Miss Marie Stinson, a pupil of Professor Pasmore, sang probably for the last time in Oakland, as she is soon to leave for the East.

A GREAT DAY FOR PUPILS.

Planting Trees at the Peralta District School.

Enthusiastic Professor Putzker Puts Life Into the Event and Leads a Subscription List.

All the good people of Peralta school district came out yesterday morning to help the little folk celebrate Arbor day, and plant their trees. Professor Putzker was there, and his interesting and pleasing address gave vim to the exercises.

Mr. Horton, a former principal, sent a token of remembrance in the shape of a large tree, which he consigned to the care of Messrs Colby and Cuff, who were to assist any of Mr. Horton's former pupils who might be present to plant it. There happened to be only one such, a young lady, for the honor of assisting whom these worthy gentlemen had had to draw straws, much to the delight of the audience.

After a half hour's drill in the front yard the scholars were all assembled on the front steps of the building, where, after singing "Columbia," they were addressed by Mr. Patten, who told what uses trees are sometimes put to. There was one use he remembered very well. It was an instrument taken from a tree which grew long and slender, and with which he had frequently been belabored for other boys' misdeeds.

After Mr. Putzker's address, the scholars scattered about the grounds and proceeded to plant their trees, and upon the ringing of the bell at 12 o'clock, they once more assembled, this time upstairs, where one of those repasts, which only loving mothers and kind friends can prepare for their little ones, was discovered. Here everyone ate to his satisfaction on the choicest edibles, and drank lemonade and coffee.

Then a quartette of school girls sang under the direction of Mrs. L. Inch.

Then somebody said that the organ that accompanied the singers did not belong to the school.

This aroused the Professor, and he sprang to his feet and said he would be the first of ten to give $15 for a piano. It didn't take Mr. Rusk long to follow with another $15, and then Mr. Colby modestly mentioned $20 as his offering, which threw the Professor into ecstacy, and seemed to affect Mr. Batten also, for he put down $25. "Put him down for $25, Mr. Biedenbach," exclaimed the Professor: "he has a big heart; put him down for $25, and Mr. Batten was put down for $25. Then, amidst great applause, the following contributions were added: Mr. Royal, $20; Mrs. Birch, $10; Mrs. Lynch, $5; Mrs. Schiller, $5; Mrs. Rush, $5; Mrs. George Colby $5; Mrs. McGuire, $5; Mrs. Ben Kneal, $5; Mrs. Geary, $5; Miss Gallagher, $5; Mr. Biedenbach, $5; Mrs. Bergen, $5; Mrs. Frame $5; Bomy Woolsey, $5; Richard Hazeltine $5; Fred Rusk, $5; Miss Jennie O'Neil, $5; Oscar Nichols, $5; Ralph Rusk, $5; Fred Colby, $5; Mrs. Logan, $2 50; Fred Chapman, $2 50; Mrs. Buckley, $5; Louise Chaloner, $2 50; making a total of $205.

A committee of four, consisting of Mesdames Rusk and Buckle and Messrs. Colby and Pryal was appointed to solicit enough more from those families who were not represented, to make up the remainder necessary.

The excellent programme furnished for the occasion was as follows: "Columbia," school; remarks, School Trustee W. R. Batten; "America," school; quartette, "Waltz Song," Misses Eva Kneal, Bessie Lynch, Mamie Frame and Ethel Bergen; address, Professor Putzker; quartette, "Old Oaken Bucket;" address, A. D. Pryal; part song, school.

The successful result of the day's entertainment is the result of the careful attention of the three teachers, Mr. Biedenbach, Miss Janice Gallagher and Miss Pryal, to whom great credit is due.

TIME CHANGED.

Be Careful Not to Miss the Railroad Train.

A LATER BOAT FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

The Sacramento Local Abandoned—Another Train to Fruit Vale—Niles and Livermore.

Commencing to-morrow morning the new time cards of the Southern Pacific Company will go into effect, and there are many changes, of which it would be advisable for the readers of THE TRIBUNE to take notice.

In the first place residents of this side of the bay will be most interested in the changes of the broad gauge local time.

Henceforth the Oakland local train connecting at the pier with the 10 o'clock boat from San Francisco will run to Fruit Vale, instead of stopping at Brooklyn, thus giving Fruit Vale people one extra nightly train.

Another change will be in the time of departure of the last two boats from San Francisco at 11:15 and 12:15 respectively, instead of 11 and 12 midnight, as now. The belated Oaklander cannot telegraph that he reached the ferry at five minutes after twelve and just missed the last boat.

This change will cause the eleven o'clock train from Fruit Vale every night to leave that station fifteen minutes later, or at 11:10 P. M., instead of 10:55, and leaving Broadway station at 11:20 P. M., instead of 11:05, as it does now. The time of departure of the last trains from Alameda and in Berkeley will be changed the same way.

Train No. 17—the Los Angeles express—which formerly left the pier on the arrival of the boat that left San Francisco at 8:30 A. M., will hereafter leave on the arrival of the 9 A. M. boat, and will leave the pier at 9:30 A. M. instead of at 9 A. M.

The second class Sacramento local train, known as No. 13, which has heretofore left the pier on the arrival of the boat that left San Francisco at 4:30 P. M., has been taken off entirely, as has also the same train returning, known as No. 12, which has been arriving at the pier at 10:15 A. M.

The Oregon Express, No. 15, which has left heretofore on the arrival of the boat that leaves San Francisco at 7 P. M., will on Sunday afternoon leave on the arrival of the boat leaving San Francisco at 5 P. M., and will carry all those passengers to Sacramento and way stations that formerly traveled on train No. 13, leaving half an hour before.

This Oregon train instead of arriving at the pier at 7:15 A. M., as formerly, will henceforth travel on the time of the Sacramento local that has been abandoned, leaving Sacramento at 6:50 A. M. and arriving at the pier at 10:15 A. M., bringing the way passengers that formerly came on the now abandoned Sacramento local.

On the Western Division, Train No. 29, which formerly left the pier on the arrival of the boat that left San Francisco at 12 o'clock noon and went as far as Niles, will hereafter run to Livermore.

Train No. 47, the Niles passenger train, which formerly left the pier on the arrival of the boat that left San Francisco at 5:30 P. M., will hereafter leave on the arrival of the 6 o'clock boat.

The Sacramento and Stockton passenger train, known as train No. 26, which heretofore has arrived at the Oakland Pier at 5:15 P. M., will hereafter arrive at the Pier at 4:20 P. M., and land its passengers in San Francisco an hour earlier than it does now.

The new train, which runs on to Livermore, instead of only to Niles, will leave Livermore, returning at 6:40 P. M., and will arrive at the pier at 8:20 P. M.

The Sunday train that formerly left San Jose at 2 P. M., and arrived at the pier at 5:45 P. M., will now leave San Jose at 3:55 P. M., and arrive at the Oakland pier at 5:50 P. M.

Louis in Luck.

Young Louis Schreiber, accused of the theft of a leather hitching strap, a horse collar and two pieces of galvanized iron pipe, from a barn on Kirkham street, formerly occupied by Mr. Hall, escaped conviction in the Police Court this morning, as it could not be shown that he had stolen the articles. The strap, which he had sold to a butcher for 15 cents, he said he had found outside of the barn.

A heavy trunk was to have been moved from 203 Eighth street yesterday, and when the Express Company called for it they noticed a terrible obnoxious smell. Their curiosity was at once aroused, and the driver suggested opening the trunk. "Youst youse look a little oudt," was heard from the owner "Dot vas mine Limberger cheese dot youse smell, undt I vant mine drunk checked to Germany." "We check baggage to all parts of the United States," replied the driver of the Whitney Standard & Oakland Transfer Company. Their office is 422 Ninth street.

Flood Adherents Increasing.

As the 14th of April draws near many are selling their household effects and taking up their residence on higher ground. A prominent widow on Madison street yesterday sold the contents of her elegant house in its entirety, to a Washington street furniture dealer for $800, the original cost being over $2000. Mr. Lyon congratulates himself on getting the biggest bargain of the season.

The Safest

AND most powerful alterative is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the eruptive diseases peculiar to children nothing else is so effective as this medicine, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy had large scrofulous ulcers on his neck and throat from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. I had heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the ulcers commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

"The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla presents, for chronic diseases of almost every kind, the best remedy known to the medical world."—D. M. Wilson, M. D., Wiggs, Arkansas.

STORM BLASTED.

Kentucky Towns Where Lives Were Lost.

THE WORK PROCEEDS AT LOUISVILLE.

Bowling Green Is Safe—Loss of Life at Eminence and Grand River—Notes of the Storm.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—Temporary roofs are being put on wherever possible. Hundreds of hogsheads of exposed tobacco are being carted to the warehouses. In spite of all efforts, however, several thousand hogsheads remain unprotected on the second, third and fourth floors. There will be considerable danger in reaching these, as they seem ready to topple into the street. The streets in the districts worst damaged are still picketed. Elsewhere, wagons and all but mere passers by are allowed to pass. Hundreds of men busy trying to save property, and a good many of those employed in the wreckage, are paid by the Board of Trade Committee. Whenever help is desired it is given. At Falls City Hall the men under the direction of the Chief of Police, are still at work.

AMONG THE RUINS.

Dragging Out the Dead From the Wreck.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—On the site of the ruined hall, are mounds of brick, mortar and beams, all in wild confusion and men digging at the base of them hunting for the dead. In all sixty-seven bodies have been taken out there. The last was that of C. Lazarus, a small shopkeeper at 1136 West Market street, next door to Falls City Hall. He was in attendance upon a lodge meeting. His body was mangled almost beyond recognition, and was taken to the temporary Morgue established in a barber shop across the street.

At the Planter's warehouse the body of Ed Moran, a foundryman in Dennis Long's iron pipe works, was discovered wedged between beams and hogsheads of tobacco. The remains were taken to his home on Twentieth street, near Main street, where his wife and four little ones had been kept in anguished suspense. When the corpse was brought in, the woman sank, almost fainting, into a chair, covering her face with her hands, while the smallest children clung to her skirts, wailing in sympathy, and the two older ones stood by gazing with sorrow. The family will be in want, and this is only one case out of several dozen similar, but the citizens are coming up bravely with subscriptions, and all needs are being promptly met for the present.

There is about $100,000 life insurance on those killed. It is upon laborers and middle class people in the small ten-cent companies and the Knights of Honor. About $50,000 in the Knights of Honor will be promptly paid by an assessment of 8 cents upon the members. The remaining $50,000 in the ten cents a week companies may break these companies, realizing only a small part to the holders of policies.

The fire insurance is only $25,000, and the cyclone insurance only $2000, held by two liquor dealers. Their joint losses are $800. Plate glass insurance amounts to $2000.

At Falls City Hall, when the hurricane struck it, were Miss App with her dancing school, numbering sixty-five, of whom it is feared, not more than twenty escaped. These were children with their brothers and fathers. In one room, on the second floor, the executive committee of the Roman Knights, consisting of seven members were in session. Theo. Engelmeir, an upholsterer at Twenty-third and Market streets, was killed. Jewel Lodge, No. 2, Knights and Ladies of Honor, was in session on the third floor. Nearly 150 members were present when the building fell. Of these it is thought that not more than fifty escaped. Humboldt Lodge, I. O. O. F., consisting of seventeen members, were holding a meeting on the same floor, and the 6 who escaped were badly injured.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

With His Little Boy Sitting on His Knee.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—One of the harrowing incidents of the disaster was the killing of Rev. Stephen E. Barnwell, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, and his young son Dudley. Mrs. Barnwell was so badly hurt that she may die. St. John's Episcopal church and an adjoining double house were shattered throughout, nothing but a mass of bricks, splinters, and beams being left. The rectory was next, and it was here that the rector met an awful death, side by side with his child. He was with his family reading when the death crash ended his life. From his position when found, he must have been killed instantly. His head was horribly crushed, the chest caved in, and the whole body bruised and mangled. His beautiful boy, who evidently was sitting at his father's knee, was killed by a terrible fracture of the skull. The body was also torn and mangled.

COUNTING THE DEAD.

A Careful Estimate Places the Number at 150.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—Up to early this morning eight-six bodies had been taken from Falls City Hall, and the cellar at Eighteenth and Magazine streets. It is the general belief that at least forty more bodies are in the dancing hall ruins. The latest and most intelligent estimate of the total number of the dead throughout the city will not exceed 150. This is careful, and fairly accurate. The Masonic Committee have wired the following to Leander Burdick, Grand Master, at Toledo, Ohio, "From what we can gather, there are about 400 houses destroyed, and three hundred persons injured, of whom 20 per cent will probably die from their injuries. One hundred and twenty-five are now dead. The citizens seem desirous of caring for their own dead and injured.

THE LATEST ESTIMATE

Of the Number Killed and Wounded at Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—It is now pretty nearly certain that the entire loss of life will not go much above 100, if that number is reached. Up to this writing the total number whose bodies have been recovered, and the missing, who, it is reasonably certain, are dead, is eighty-eight. In addition there are about a dozen or so very badly injured and death may ensue. There are from 150 to 200 persons injured to an extent worth noting, and probably 500 to 1000 have very slight bruises or scratches.

KENTUCKY TOWNS.

Loss of Life and Damage to Property Reported.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—A special in regard to the storm says that the manufacturing town of Grand River, near Paducah, was struck by the blast and a dozen houses were blown down. Two persons were killed—a woman and a boy—and twenty hurt. All the telegraph lines are destroyed. At Farmington there is much damage to buildings, but no loss of life. At Paducah there was little damage. The telegraph lines are all down and it is thought that the path of the storm through the section not yet heard from may have been one of disaster.

OUT OF LUCK.

A Fatal Accident on a Kentucky Railroad.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—A train near Owenboro, Ky., on the Louisville and Nashville road, went through a bridge, killing several men, including the engineer.

AT BOWLING GREEN

No One Was Killed, but Much Damage Was Done.

CINCINNATI, March 29.—A special from Bowling Green, Ky., says that no one was killed there, although the storm did much damage.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—Representative Goodnight of Kentucky received the following telegram today: "Bowling Green was not touched by the storm. There is no damage to property nor loss of life in your district.

ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

Greenville Suffers a Foretaste of the Coming Floods.

GREENVILLE, Miss., March 29.—The storm of Thursday drove the waters of the swollen Mississippi over the levee, and caused great crevasses where the embankment was heretofore thought secure.

CAUGHT IN THE STORM.

Six Lives Lost by the Sinking of Scows.

MEMPHIS, March 29.—The towboat Mail City was caught at Gayoso in Thursday's storm. The Mail City was not damaged, but the entire tow sank, and six lives were lost.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—After business of minor importance the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Army Appropriation bill.

NO TRUTH IN THE STORY

That Bridget Sweeney Confessed to Setting Fire to Tracy's House.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—The police authorities state that there is absolutely no truth in the story that Bridget Sweeney, an old and trusted servant, has confessed to having caused the recent fire at Secretary Tracy's house.

KILLED WITH A BEER MALLET.

The Fatal Result of a Saloon Row at Reno.

RENO, Nev., March 29.—Last evening a drunken painter, recently from California, named William Harold, was fatally injured by Charles Frisch, the proprietor of the Pyramid Saloon and Lodging House, being struck on the head with a beer mallet. Harold was creating a disturbance, and Frisch undertook to put him out, but was met with a strong resistance and threats of shooting, when the latter struck him a heavy blow with the mallet, producing death in about ten hours. The dead man was 35 years old.

A WHOLESALE STABBER.

A South Dakota Man Tries to Kill His Whole Family.

FAULKTON, S. D., March 29.—E. Eckhart, a livery man residing fifteen miles northwest of this place, stabbed his two sons and cut his wife's throat yesterday. He was under bonds to answer a charge of attempt to kill a neighbor a week ago. His family testified against him at the preliminary examination. The injured still live.

HE SHALL HANG.

A Sonoma County Murderer Likely to Get His Deserts.

The Jury in the Case of William Bruggy Makes No Recommendation Concerning Sentence.

SANTA ROSA, March 29.—William Bruggy, the Windsor murderer, was found guilty, last night, of murder in the first degree, without any recommendation by the jury. This is the second verdict of the kind ever rendered in this county, and there is considerable excitement over the prospect of hanging one of the most brutal murderers in the criminal annals of the state. Bruggy, who had been tantalizing his victim, Louison, for several hours, went into a saloon and waited for Louison to come in from the back door. Placing the muzzle of a revolver at the back of Louison's head, he shot him dead. Louison was unarmed and had made no demonstration.

The T. F. Gray Company has been incorporated at Haywards, and purposes to buy and sell merchandise, deal in real estate; manufacture goods, wares and merchandise, and to purchase patents, etc. The directors are Thomas F. Gray, John Garretson and George Gray of Haywards, and J. B. Reinstein and Thomas E. Ryan, both of San Francisco. The capital stock is $25,000, divided into 250 shares of the value of $100 each. F. Gray owns 124 shares of stock and J. B. Reinstein 123.

Two Runaways.

William Riley alias Tom Maloney, aged 14, and Dan McCarthy alias Mahoney, aged 15, came to Oakland Wednesday night to attend a sparring exhibition. They lingered and loitered about the streets until 1:30 o'clock this morning, when Officer White sent them to the City Prison as runaways.

HE IS DEAD.

Remi Chabot, the Capitalist.

THE FATAL RESULT OF DROPSY.

Death Occurred at Half After Two O'Clock Today.

Joseph G. Eastland's Reminiscences of the Life of a Kindly Man and a Good Citizen.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 29.—Remi Chabot died at the Baldwin Hotel at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon.

He had been gradually growing worse and for some days his death has been expected to occur at any time.

Dropsical symptoms, which began recently, increased daily, and when this condition became apparent all hopes of his recovery were given up.

Mr. Chabot has been at the Baldwin

Remi Chabot.

Hotel for several weeks, having removed thither from his residence in Oakland, in order to be near his physician.

Mrs. Chabot has been with him all the time during his illness, and the other members of his family were also with him at the Baldwin.

Mr. Chabot was born in St. Hyacinthe, opposite Montreal, Canada, and was 55 years old at the time of his death. He has two sisters still living at St. Hyacinthe. He leaves as heirs a wife and four daughters, the eldest of whom is about 18 years of age.

It is not believed among his most intimate friends that his bequests will extend much beyond his family.

AN OLD FRIEND.

Joseph G. Eastland's Reminiscences of Early Days.

When I first knew Remi Chabot he came down to San Francisco from the mines," said Joseph G. Eastland, the well-known capitalist who was seen at his office in San Francisco. "I think he had been operating with his brother in Nevada County. He seemed well-to do financially and independent. He was a very handsome man in those days, with fine dark eyes and flowing black hair. His headquarters were the old Rosette House which afterwards became the Cosmopolitan Hotel. At about that time A. Chabot, who had interested himself in bringing water into the mines, took hold of the scheme for supplying water to San Francisco. John Bensley and others had scoured that little lake which lies off there back of the road to the Cliff House, and they were figuring on how to get the water into town. They talked of running a tunnel and all that sort of thing. Anthony Chabot took charge and built that flume around the bluffs, which is there to this day. That became the Bensley water works. Remi Chabot was interested with his brother in that project. At the same time a man named Ensign was bringing in water from a little spring up on Washington street, in a little hollow known as 'Spring Valley.' The Chabots, Bensley and the others in one company joined issues with Ensign and his associates, and this was the origin of the great Spring Valley water company.

"Sometime after this, myself and a friend interested ourselves in supplying the then little town of Oakland with gas. A. Chabot went in with us, and took a third interest. After he got over to Oakland, he saw the chance to bring water in there, and sold out his gas stock to go into water. Remi Chabot became interested over there with him.

"Along there somewhere, Remi Chabot married Miss Emelie Martin-Pady—I suppose that was about twenty years ago. His wife was an unusually beautiful and particularly accomplished woman, classically educated, a fine musician, and all that. I suppose that was about twenty years ago. Then he made his home in Oakland, and you know about how he has been interested with his brother over there. He was a splendid man and a fine citizen and I thought a great deal of him.

"I do not know that I can tell you anything more about him. He was a self-contained man, and was never given to talking about himself or his younger days. I don't even know whether he came to this coast with his brother or not, but he arrived here in very early days."

A QUARTER OF A MILLION.

An Estimate of the Value of the Property of Remi Chabot.

Mr. Chabot's estate must closely approximate $250,000. He was a well-to-do man when his brother, Anthony Chabot, died, and by the terms of the latter's will he received, in conjunction with his wife, a splendid fortune. By the terms of the will the following property went to Remi Chabot and wife:

Twenty-eight hundred and sixty-three shares of the Contra Costa Water Company's capital stock; forty bonds of the same company, worth $1000 each; all the money received from the sale of the Vallejo Water Works; the California Paper Company's note for $4000; 200 shares in the capital stock of the Commercial Union (of little value); claim against Edward Chabot for $7551 (not valuable); twenty shares of the capital stock of the First National Bank of this city; 570 shares of the Judson Manufacturing Company's stock; 4089 shares of the stock of the Puget Sound Iron Company (since sold); claim against the same company for $40,000, and an undivided one fourth interest in the Pioneer Pulp Company, which has been sold.

Most of Mr. Chabot's money was invested in stocks and bonds of the water company and other corporations. His principal real estate consisted of his fine home property, at the corner of Eleventh and Madison streets, and a fine ranch near St. Helena, in Napa county, which he had greatly improved.

SOME FILLING.

Anybody Can Eat Eggs, but "Potatoes Is Potatoes."

The Eleventh street commission merchants were all rustling about at the top of their speed this morning when a TRIBUNE reporter wandered in among them to find how prices for produce were running. New vegetables were plenty, except new potatoes, which are slow in coming in on account of the weather. Eastern potatoes arriving in large lots have eased prices a bit, but it still costs lots of money to eat potatoes. George Fish was selling Easterns by the sack at 2½ to 2¾ cents a pound, and Californias, which are scarce, at 3 cents. Onions by the sack are going as high as 5½ cents a pound, but when James Vance, steward of the Alhenian Club, asked the price of a retailer his eyes stuck out, for he was asked a quarter for three pounds.

Asparagus retails for from 6 to 8 cents a pound; peas, 6 to 8 cents, and rhubarb, 5 to 7 cents. Cabbages, turnips, radishes, cauliflower, carrots, and beets are held at the usual spring prices. There are still a few apples, which slowly filter down from Oregon and Northern California. The best are from $2 50 to $2 75 a box, and few people care to eat apples at that price. Oranges are plentiful, at $2 to $3 50 a box—the latter for the best navels.

Anybody can eat eggs. Good fresh California eggs cost 18 cents a dozen at wholesale, and only 20 cents a dozen at retail. People can live on eggs who can't afford to touch a potato or look at an onion. Chickens can be had at from $6 to $7 a dozen wholesale, and 65 cents to six bits each retail. Broilers run from 50 to 65 cents each. Turkeys retail at 75 cents a pound. These are about the average prices. The duck's are about out of the market. They have been few and poor all the season. In fact there is little game of any kind shown now.

The Wheat Restored.

The twelve sacks of wheat which disappeared in the night time from the sidewalk in front of Saunders & Westphal's mill and was found in Louis Asher's yard, was today ordered restored to the owners by Judge Henshaw. As the possession of stolen property does not constitute in itself the evidence of theft, Asher will escape prosecution.

Beautiful Easter Cards

As in years gone, by L. Prang & Co., announced new Easter cards for this year. Satin art prints and booklets which surpass all their previous efforts for their gorgeousness and artistic beauty are among the novelties. The most noticeable feature of the cards is their thoroughly American character being made from designs by American artists with texts by American authors. Flowers and spring blossoms as well as little children are the prevailing subjects in Easter art prints and a great variety of forms are offered such as pads, book-marks, sachets, handkerchief boxes etc. F. Schuler Mathews, Louis K. Harlow, Lizabeth B. Comings, and others furnish the designs for the Easter cards this year, some of them being: "A Spring Song," "Winged Winds," "Jesus Lover of My Soul," "Christ is Risen," "Easter Spires," "The Angel at the Sepulchre," "Come Sunshine Come," and "The Messenger of Spring."

All the local books and stationery stores have Prang's cards in great variety.

Paper by Gilbert Tompkins on Cherry Culture.

THE INFLUENCE OF SOILS ON PEAS.

Varieties of the Cucumber—Some Japanese and Chinese Cucumbers—From India.

THE CUCUMBER.

This is a much more interesting study in a botanical sense than the watermelon, and has a greater climate range than the watermelon or cantaloupe. It is eaten young as a pickle, older as a salad, and may be cooked at maturity like a squash. Each country appears to have its special varieties, some of which are not edible; others are actually poisonous, and others again are eaten with relish undressed.

The fruits vary in length from less than two inches to six feet, and from an ounce to twenty pounds in weight. Their prevailing color is green; but there are also white, yellow, pearl color with green stripes, and striped green and white varieties. In form they are straight, curved, tortuous, cylindrical and prismatic; with smooth, hairy, prickly, spinous and knobbed surfaces. Some are full of spines when quite young, and others like a hairy caterpiller; but both kinds become smooth as they mature.

Hairy Cucumbers are the favorites of Egypt and Syria, where they are eaten in vast quantities, as our people eat apples, without any preparation or even paring. In India they are used for pickling. We have tested two varieties from Cairo, and one from Beirut. One of the Cairo varieties is long, drupe-shaped, of a delicate pearl green tint, and has ten bright green lines running from end to end in shallow grooves. It is a beautiful looking fruit. The leaves of the plant are three-lobed and of small size; the fruit is known in Egypt as the Quate. The other Cairo variety bears a curved fruit of much less attractive appearance, and the leaf is scalloped-edge. The Syrian hairy Cucumber is known by the native name of Mukte, and is considered the best in Palestine, where they grow also pure white fruits, and green ones that turn lemon-yellow at maturity. The Mukte somewhat resembles the Quate, but has the green lines only at the ends; its leaves are of the form of a Palm-leaf fan, and the plant looks more like a Cantalupe than a Cucumber-vine. The natives eat this cucumber in quantities, skin and all, and American residents claim that it is much more wholesome than any of our varieties; when grown climbing it is a beautiful fruit but is apt to grow hollow in our soil and climate.

The reticulated cucumber has within a few years become well known by its sponges, sent as a commercial product in bales from Japan and Egypt. The first sold here was the product of the wild variety of Cuba, which grows very small in that island, but larger in Florida and in this city. The Cuba sponge is very fine in texture and only about eight inches long; it is used by Florida ladies for washing their hands.

The Chinese and Japanese have the largest of the cucumber family, the fruits being very thick in proportion to their length. Seeds of the Chinese variety were sent to me under the name of a long, green squash by a correspondent at Foochow. I at once found that the fruit could not be a squash, and was curious to find out what the peculiarly formed seeds would produce. The plant proved to be a cucumber-vine of large proportions, having a leaf like that of the White Spine, but larger. The fruit is large and green, and would be taken for a squash, which it tastes somewhat like when cooked; it hybridizes readily with our cucumber, which ruins the product of the seed.

The Benincasa cerifera of India is an intermediate in character between the large Chinese cucumber and a watermelon. The vine is somewhat like that of a squash, and the young fruits are covered with hairs: the seeds are white, very light in weight and abundant. The fruit looks like a watermelon covered with a white coating like the bloom upon a blue plum, but much thicker; it is sometimes called the "Waxed Squash" and is prepared for the table by stewing; the seeds are much more like those of a watermelon than of a squash. The fruit has been grown at Redland Farm, New Jersey, and bears our climate well; I do not know that it has been cooked in this country; in India it is served at weddings.

Prompted by a remark made by an Armeno-Turkish lady, I sent to Constantinople and obtained in 1883 the seeds of a green cucumber, to which gave the name of the "Pera," and which I believe to be the largest and finest flavored variety ever introduced into America; and this appears to be the opinion generally held in regard to it. I also obtained seeds of the white cucumber of Palestine, and the prolific green cucumber of Malatiyeh, in the valley of the Euphrates, both of which were fully tested, and the former of which is considered a valuable acquisition for quality and productiveness.—From an address before the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society by Robert T. Harris, M. D.

CHERRY CULTURE.

Gilbert Tompkins of San Leandro read a paper on "Cherry Culture" at the State Fruit Growers' convention in Los Angles. It is as follows.

Taking one year with another, there is no fruit that gives more satisfactory returns throughout this section of the country than the cherry. The rich valley land that lies around San Leandro, San Lorenzo and Haywards, is unusually well-fitted for cherry culture, in both soil and climate. In former days San Francisco received a very large proportion of the entire amount of cherries consumed from the pioneer cherry orchards of San Lorenzo and vicinity. Many other sections of the State produce at the present time fine fruit in large quantities, and the virtual monopoly formerly held by this district has disappeared, although the business is still very profitable at prices about one-tenth the size of those received 15 and 20 years ago. In my experience, the best results have been gained on rich not too light valley land. Adobe is not nearly as well suited to the cherry as a lighter and more friable soil. On the other hand, I would not choose a soil containing much sand or gravel for the site of a profitable cherry orchard, although this may not be the experience of cherry growers in other parts of the State. The trees are slow in coming into bearing. A sample of the fruit may be expected in a few years after planting, but there is a great difference between an occasional handful of fruit and a crop large enough to pay for the expense of cultivating the orchard and handling the fruit. I doubt if a cherry orchard will really pay in this section before it is eight years of age, although some varieties produce profitable crops earlier than others. The Rockport Begarreau is one of the best standard varieties as an early producer. The Napoleon Bezarrean (Royal Anne) seldom gets down to actual bearing before the trees are nine or ten years of age. There are exceptional cases that differ from what I have just stated. The cultivation required depends very much on the soil and circumstances. The southern farm orchard is plowed from two to three times a year and weed knives and cultivators are kept going as they are needed. I have adopted the plan of pruning every year. I think that that is the best plan for any tree that is apt to run to wood growth, as is the cherry on rich land. By leaving the trees unpruned there is not that stimulus given to the production of wood, and the energy of the tree is more generally used in forming fruit wood. Downing states that the generally accepted theory of the formation of fruit wood is the ripening of the sap in the limbs of the tree. If the branches are left uncut the ripening process goes on much faster than when the growth of the tree is perpetually stimulated by the cutting of the branches. With proper handling cherries are one of the best of the shipping fruits. While many parts of the State produce good cherries, the area of land suitable is much less than for many other fruits. So with improved shipping facilities we look for a steady and profitable market for all first-class cherries.

THE INFLUENCE OF SOIL ON PEAS.

To illustrate how peas are influenced by the soils in which they grow, Professor Bailey, in a late bulletin, gives these facts concerning a plot of go den gem peas in the garden of the Cornell University Experiment Station. The rows began in a good rich loam and ran into a stiff and strong clay. A good sod had been turned under a few days before the peas were sown. The ends of the rows were so dissimilar at picking time that they appeared to be planted with different varieties. The average height of the plants in loam was eighteen inches: average of pods to the plant, five and a half; all the pods, except sometimes the very uppermost ones, were ripe, and there were no flowers. The plants on clay were larger, deeper green, with more bloom, and a tendency, not apparent in the other case, to produce two pods on a peduncle. The average number of pods to a plant was seven: only two-thirds of the pods were ripe, and there were still some flowers.—Garden and Forest.

Dyspepsia

Makes many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently yet efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and, by thus overcoming the local symptoms, cures the headache, and refreshes the tired mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, painting, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and it did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. Hotter the Weather Bigger the Proof.

As the weather grows warm, the sale of James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound rapidly increases. This proves that many women recognize the fact that PEARLINE makes washing and cleaning very much easier than when done with the ordinary means. Proves also that summer clothing, being of delicate texture and color, will not stand the rough usage necessary when washed with soap, and establishes the fact that PEARLINE, in doing away with the rubbing, lessens the wear and tear and fills a very important place. Delightful for bathing in fresh or salt water. Its ingredients render it harmless to the most delicate skin. Especially during the hot weather it is to your advantage to use PEARLINE, and only humane to supply your servants with it, and thus lighten their labors; besides you insure much better results. Beware of imitations. JAMES PYLE, New York.

WOMAN'S REALM.

The Gentle Queens of the World of Letters.

WRITERS UPON TEMPERANCE TOPICS.

Mrs. Edholm's Eighth Contribution Upon Women Journalists of This Country.

Perhaps the journalistic venture most dear to the White Ribbon fraternity is their national organ, the Union Signal of Chicago. Soon after the great crusade of 1814 it was born and christened Our Union. It was edited till 1882 by Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, a woman widely known as an author and journalist. She has corresponded for nearly all the great religious papers of the country. She is a deeply religious woman and much interested in missionary efforts.

Miss M. E. Winslow was also editorially connected with Our Union from 1876 to 1882, working unremittingly in the cause so dear to her heart. She has since been engaged in another temperance publication Our Work and has contributed to a score of religious and daily papers.

The subsequent history is thus given by Miss Willard in her charming autobiography: "At the Newark convention Our Union, our national organ, was found to be so heavily in debt that its committee of publication resigned, and Mrs. Jane M. Geddes of Michigan, Mrs. Mary T. Burt of New York, Mrs. C. B. Buell of Connecticut, and myself volunteered to save the day for this new journalistic venture and literary outgrowth of the crusade. We put in what money we had as a free-will offering, gathered up gifts from our friends, gave several months' gratuitous work, during which I was entertained in Brooklyn by my good friends, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Stout, and we were so happy as to see the enterprise placed on a paying basis. It was removed to Chicago in 1882, by action of the Louisville convention, merged with The Signal, organ of the Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union, founded by Mrs. T. B. Carse in 1880, and under the name of The Union Signal was at first edited by Mrs. Mary Bannister Willard, and is now edited by Mary Allen West, issuing a weekly edition of about 80,000. It is one of half a score of periodicals brought out by our Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, a joint stock company of women only, which declared in 1886 a dividend of 4 per cent.; in 1887, one of 5 per cent.; and in 1888, one of 6 per cent.; besides owning its machinery, handling in 1888, $130,000, and sending out over 125,000,000 pages of literature.

Mrs. Mary B. Willard, whose deceased husband was for years editor of the Chicago Post, as a journalist did a great deal of work on that paper. Previous to 1880, Mrs. Willard had quite a reputation as a sketch writer for the Independent, Christian Union, and other weeklies. She edited with marked ability the Union Signal, but resigned to open a girls' school in Berlin, Germany, which has been very successful. The present editors, Miss Mary Allen West, Miss Julia Ames, and Mrs. Elizabeth W. Andrew, are women of great talent, well shown by their splendidly edited paper.

From the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association are also issued the Oak and Ivyleaf, the organ of the "Y's," ably edited by Miss Margaret Sudduth, and the Young Crusader, organ of the Loyal Temperance Legions, by Miss Alice Guernsey, a rising young journalist; also, a German prohibition paper, Der Deutsch Ameri Kauer.

Perhaps no one enterprise constitutes so fine an object lesson of the changed conditions of women, and their business and intellectual capabilities, as the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association under the Woman's Christian Temperance Union auspices.

The Ladies' Home Journal, a delightful magazine, specially devoted to the interests of woman and home, has been published in Philadelphia for seven years, and been finely edited by Mrs. Louisa Knapp. Owing to a pressure of other duties at the beginning of 1890, Mrs. Knapp resigned her editorial position, and was succeeded by that versatile writer, Edward W. Bok, whose national reputation assures its success. He is assisted by Miss Emma C. Hewitt. Among its contributors are such gifted women as Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, Maud Howe—the talented daughter of Julia Ward Howe—Felicia Holt, Mrs. F. M. Howard, Margaret E. Sangster, and Anna Katherine Green.

Even in the South a woman journalist, Miss Ellen Dortch edits the Franklin County Register, and is eulogized by the Atlanta Constitution as the pioneer woman editor of Georgia.

Mrs Clara Foltz, the distinguished lady lawyer of California, for two years was proprietor of the San Diego Daily Bee which she sold for a large sum.

Having given brief mention of women who are editors, own and conduct their own papers, we hasten to the large army of women who are contributors, staff writers and correspondents of the great daily and weekly press. Among these, Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, who for years ruled with such queenly grace, "The Woman's Kingdom" in the Chicago Daily Inter Ocean, is one of the women of whom America may be proud. Mrs. Harbert is a devoted mother, and she writes her beautiful articles on children and home and motherhood, with the sweetest inspiration in the world to guide her—sitting in her own lovely home with her precious little ones playing about her. Is it strange she is called the "sweet mother editor" by one of her Western admirers. This same friend says: "She seems to carry her home life into the columns of the paper with a pure freshness and general naturalness that touch the heart." How could her writings be otherwise, for her soul is as noble and kindly as her face is beautifully sweet.

Another great paper which shows its keen business sense by devoting large space to the advancement of women is the Indianapolis Sentinel and the brilliant woman who edits it is Mrs. Florence M. Adkinson, who makes the department sparkle with intellectuality. At one time she was associated with Mrs. Mary E. Haggart in the editorial and business management of the Woman's Tribune. She was also at one time owner and editor of the American Housewife, afterwards known as Your Home Magazine. She has been contributor to a large number of papers, especially the daily papers of Indianapolis. The "Woman's World" in the Daily Sentinel is a model of excellence. Mrs. Adkinson so ably presents every phase of the woman question that she has created enthusiasm unbounded in the cause and is kindling anew the sublime faith that woman's future means the uplifting of humanity and such a civilization as the world has never seen.

Mrs. May Wright Sewall, one of the most talented of women, is a journalist of well known ability. She has been for years, Corresponding Editor of Mrs. Esther T. Housh's Young Woman's Magazine, and her articles show much research, and great power of condensation. In 1875-76, she wrote letters from the South, describing people and scenery for the Indianapolis Saturday Herald, and the Chicago Daily Inter Ocean, and in 1880, sent the same papers fine letters from the Concord School of Philosophy. She has been a valued contributor to the Boston Woman's Journal, and the Weekly Magazine of Chicago, and her "Idea of Home," in the Journal of Speculative Philosophy, edited by William T. Harris of New York, is most forcible and original, and reminds one strikingly of Margaret Fuller's style. She edits "Woman's Work" in the Indianapolis Daily Times. This is almost entirely original, and shows deep thought and exhaustive work. Mrs. Sewall is personally prepossessing, has a grand intellect and wonderful executive ability, and is also famed as a lecturer.

These departments are now "the thing" in daily journalism, and the daily paper not furnishing, at least once a week, several columns devoted, exclusively, to women, and edited by one, is neglecting its own best interests. Those columns pay, or they would not be continued. Woman and her advancement is becoming, almost, as important a subject as the prize-fights, the murders and robberies, so minutely described in our dailies, and our editors are beginning to find it out, and are willing to give them, perhaps, one-tenth the space devoted to crime.

A QUESTION WELL ANSWERED

In What Respect Is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Better Than Any Other?

WE WILL TELL YOU.

It is the only remedy that will liquify the tough, tenacious mucus and render it easy to expectorate.

It is the only remedy that will cause the expulsion of mucus from the air cells of the lungs.

It is the only remedy that will counteract the effect of a severe cold, and greatly mitigate if not effectually cure the cold within one day's time. To do this it must be used as soon as the first symptoms of the cold appear.

It has been clearly shown in thousands of instances, that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will cure a severe cold in less time than any other treatment.

It is the only remedy that will invariably prevent croup, which makes it one of the most valuable medicines yet discovered in this or any other country.

It is the only remedy that has cured thousands of cases of croup without a single failure.

It is the only remedy that will prevent all dangerous consequences from whooping cough.

It is pleasant and safe to take. There is not the least danger in giving it to children in large and frequent doses, which are always required in cases of croup and sometimes for whooping cough. As a proof of this we refer to Mr. John F. Olson of Des Moines, Iowa, whose eighteen months old boy drank the entire contents of a 50 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy without the least injury. Certainly it made the baby vomit very freely; but after taking a nap he would have been glad to have drank another bottle of the remedy, as he liked it. ISN'T THIS A PRETTY STORY.

Mrs. Solaro Dressed Up Casey in a Woman's Gown.

Mrs. Annie Solaro of Alameda, who is soon to be led to the altar by A. A. Bardeau, has a horse which she drives in a buggy. The thought occurred to her the other day that it would be well to vary the monotony by using the animal as a saddle horse.

But was the horse ever ridden by a lady before? and was it safe for her to make the experiment? These questions revolved themselves in the widow's mind, and suddenly she hit upon a solution.

She has in her employ a man commonly known as Casey, but whose true name is Kiveble. Going to him, she said: "Casey, I'll bet you a dollar that you are afraid to put on a woman's dress and ride my horse to Park street and back."

"I'll go you," was Casey's quick reply.

Mrs. Solaro furnished him with a dress, and a lady's saddle was placed on the horse. Casey mounted the animal and rode after the lady's style. The horse was perfectly tractable, and when Casey came back Mrs. Solaro was eager to take a ride.

She endeavored to mount, but in her hurry she did not have sufficient care for her dress. She forgot to remove her bustle and her dress was badly torn, so much so that she had to abandon her ride. "Wouldn't this make a funny item for the newspapers," she remarked as she started to enter the house.

TO WELCOME S. S. BEEL.

The Young Violinist to Be Heartily Greeted on His Return.

No further word has been heard from Sigmund Beel since the receipt of the telegram announcing his arrival in New York City. His relatives here are confident that he will be in this city early in the coming month. A premonitory tremolo of pianissimo excitement is felt in musical circles on both sides of the bay. He will return with the strongest sort of endorsement from his revered teacher, Joachim, and eminent violinists, who have visited this Coast, and who have heard him play abroad, declare that there is no doubt about his rank as a virtuoso, both as a player technically and in point of a soulful quality, that was his distinguishing characteristic before leaving Oakland.

Arrangements are making for a grand reception concert in this city, to be followed by one in San Francisco. A prominent Jackson street society lady has declared that she will give a banquet in his honor. Mr. Collins, of the cemetery will send in a wagon load of flowers to decorate Mr. Beel's residence against the welcome home. Mr. Beel will be given the heartiest sort of greeting.

Ludermann, the proprietor, to recover $35, the value of the clothes, alleging that it was through Ludermann's negligence in leaving his door open after putting his room in order that the clothes were stolen. Justice Snook will try the suit some time next week.

MOVING WATER.

Further Agitation by the Citizens' Committee.

FOOTE AND DAVIS TO BE RETAINED.

Grounds of the Proposed Suit to Oust the City Council—Ten Thousand Dollars Wanted.

There was not a great many of the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred present at California Hall last night, probably on account of the agitation of the water question which was going on out of doors. The meeting was called for 7:30 P. M., but it was after 8 o'clock before Chairman W. R. Thomas felt impelled to rap for order.

Israel Lawton, from the sub-committee specially intrusted with the matter of pushing the suit against the City Council, reported that ex-Mayor W. R. Davis had been retained as counsel, and that it was expected to arrange with W. W. Foote to assist him. Those present expressed satisfaction at the selection.

In reply to Prof. Frank Soule, Judge Lawton admitted that the failure of the Council to fix rates for this year, did not constitute a cause of action, but he was sure that the failure of the Council to compel the Water Company to file with the County Recorder, before December 15th of last year, an annual report giving the names, residences and amounts paid by all rate payers, did furnish a good ground for ousting the sitting members.

The following gentlemen were announced as having been selected as a committee to canvass for necessary funds: First ward—W. Gross, Rev. G. W. Bothwell; Second ward—D. P. Sackett, S. M. Babbitt; Third ward—William Moller, J. S. White; Fourth ward—H. A. Powell, J. M. Bassett; Fifth ward—Peter Thompson, D. Stewart; Sixth ward—J. K. Peirsol, S. R. Andrews; Seventh ward—Dr. Lane, J. E. Biethen; outside the city—Martin Dunn and William Collins. These gentlemen will meet this evening at the office of Benham & Thomas, 471 Ninth street.

William Moller asked how much money was needed and was told that $10,000 was desirable to push the suit along.

Secretary Dutton said that Librarian Rowell, of the University, had applied for the data relating to water supply sent in by 150 cities which had reported after the committee had done with it. The request of the Librarian was not granted, however, for an motion of Mr. Piersol, Principal J. P. Garlic and Professor Soule were appointed a committee to prepare a digest of the data on hand.

When the question of artesian water supply came up there was a wide divergence of opinion. Mr. Kimball wanted a stock company to prospect for artesian water, with stock to be subscribed for in sums from $5 upwards. If successful, the wells could be sold to the city. But Judge Lawton didn't like the scheme. He thought the committee was scattering too much. He wanted to keep right after the Council and the water company.

William Collins said the water company was getting frightened, and instanced the case of George Godfrey, who, last month, refused to pay the rates charged; had had his house surveyed; found that he had been overcharged $4 a month for six years; and had then refused the rebate offered him by the company. Judge Lawton corroborated this, and said that Mr. Godfrey was having papers prepared in a suit against the company.

Mr. Collins then said: "If we get the Council turned out, and the water stock depreciated, that is all we need. I am today having all my buildings surveyed."

W. W. Blow considered the matter of overcharge most important, and said that, if it could be substantiated, it was ground for the rescinding of the water company's charter, and the forfeiture of its plant to the city.

After a good deal of desultory talk about artesian water, the following resolution, offered by M. J. Keller, was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Water be authorized to employ assistance at a cost not to exceed $100, to be paid out of the funds of this committee, to collect information regarding the location and depth of existing artesian wells in or around the city of Oakland, the quality and quantity of water they furnish, and its adaptability for general water supply to the city, together with detailed plans for prosecuting further investigations, and report the result to a future meeting of this committee.

It was agreed not to change the provision of the constitution that if any member of the committee were absent from two meetings in succession he could be dropped by a majority vote of those present; but no one was dropped, though many had offended.

John Schumacher, D. Edward Collins, Welles Whitmore, J. M. Bassett and L. H. Briggs were added to the Committee.

Attention was given to the fact that April 1st would come before the next meeting of the committee. That is the time limit given the water company to give assurance that it would comply with certain demands of the committee. After that Attorney General Johnson is to be asked to bring suit for the annulment of the company's charter. The committee was urged to be prepared for action.

The committee will meet again at the same place on next Friday evening.

SPEAKS FOR THE CITY.

The Growth of Oakland Mirrored by "The Tribune."

Echoes.

One criterion of the status of vigor in a town is the spirit displayed by its newspapers, which, usually, are accurate reflectors of neighborhood vitality. There may be cases where a dull publication flourishes in a live city, but Echoes has in mind no such instance. Here in Oakland THE EVENING TRIBUNE is a splendid illustration of the proposition in question. Every jog forward of this place is mirrored in that sterling daily, which also supplies a constant current of stimulus to the body whose activities it chronicles. Oakland is rapidly doffing its character of a listless suburban element, and instead, is donning metropolitan features and wearing those attributes gracefully and as one to the manner born. As this town has progressed toward the state of bustle that is a phase of every notable American large city the TRIBUNE has kept pace with the onward march, yielding words of encouragement unremittingly. And prosperity has attended this exhibition of fidelity to the interests of the place. That journal has grown stalwartly in circulation and influence, and has extended its scope in accordance with the exigencies. Today THE TRIBUNE is one of the great daily publications of the land. Solicitous to add still further to its prowess and completeness the management of that paper has acquired a printing press and stereotyping plant that will be of decided advantage in the work of publication. The new press, known technically as a Webb perfector, will print, cut, paste and fold 15,000 eight-page papers an hour. With its application in the TRIBUNE business is to follow divers improvements in the style and production of the paper itself. Already matchless in its field, the future of that journal is certainly brilliant beyond conjecture!

POSIES AND PRICES.

Something About the Flowers That Bloom in the Spring.

"Roses at any other price would smell as sweet," said a florist today, as he wired some short stemmed Marechal Niels for the corsage bouquet of some stately dame. There are no roses of any account grown out of doors yet, because of the weather. Hot-house duchesses sell for 50 cents a dozen for short stems, and 75 cents a dozen for long stems. Marechal Niels go at $1 for shorts, and $1 25 for longs. La France roses are about the same as Marechal Niels. There are very few safranos coming in, and I could hardly give you a quotation on them.

"Camellias? Well you might say that they are 50 cents a basket. They're a drug on the market, especially the pink ones. We don't cut ten per cent of what we could if there was a demand for them. They are worn a good deal, too, for corsage bouquets when wired. Hyacinths sell for from 50 cents to six bits a dozen stalks. Tulips are backward and only a few are in bloom.

"There is still a good demand for violets. We get ten cents a bunch for both the white and the purple varieties but I understand they still sell for 25 cents in San Francisco. Calla lilies are 30 cents a dozen. Next week, Easter week, they will be 50 cents. There is every prospect for an abundance of flowers this year, and I think the quality will be superior to that of some years past. The demand for all sorts of flowers shows a steady increase from year to year.

"The sale of bulbs was limited this season, and the same is true of plants and trees, especially fruit trees. This is on account of the continued rainy weather, which rendered planting impossible. It is not too late yet, however, to set out fruit trees, and we have been holding them back."

"How's smilax?"

"Smilax is scarce. We are now getting 25 cents a yard for it. We have been letting it go in two-yard lots at 35 cents."

FLOSSIE'S ASSAILANT.

The Officers Believe That They Have the Right Man.

John Wilson, the old man accused of assaulting little Flossie Moran, is still confined in the County Jail. The Berkeley officers are working up the case, and they say that they have a good case against the prisoner. When Wilson was first arrested he was locked up in the Berkeley jail. During the evening Town Marshal Chappie caused himself to be locked up in a cell with Wilson and soon gained his confidence. It is asserted that Chappie wormed a statement from Wilson to the effect that he was the assailant of Flossie Moran. Standing just outside the cell were Constable Fonzo and Mr. Broad, who overheard the conversation with Chappie.

Wilson, however, denies that he made any statement to Chappie, and avers that he is the victim of a plot. Yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Moran called at the jail, and said she believed the prisoner is the man who assaulted her daughter. Little Flossie, however, could not recognize Wilson as her assailant. The circumstances are so suspicious, that the officers feel justified in having Wilson brought to trial on the charge.

FISHER LOSES.

The Superintendent Failed to Win His Fight.

PRINCIPAL PIERCE'S CERTIFICATE.

Director Fred M. Campbell Wins the Fight in Which the Teachers Are Interested.

The long-pending discussion concerning the granting of a grammar school course certificate to Principal Pierce of the Mission San Jose school, was settled today at the meeting of the County Board of Education. The contest over the certificate was commenced some weeks ago, when Superintendent Fisher opposed the application of the teacher on the ground that he had violated the rules of the board and had not acted in a manner becoming a teacher. Director Fred M. Campbell stated at the time, that, while he did not have any particular interest in Mr. Pierce's cause, yet, feeling that there was justness in his application, he felt it his duty, as a member of the board, to support Mr. Pierce in his application, believing that his claim was a just one, and being desirous of acting with fairness to all parties concerned. Thus it was, that a little war was commenced by the literary gentlemen, with Superintendent Fisher arrayed on one side, and Director Campbell on the other.

After the smoke of battle has cleared away, it is seen that Director Campbell comes out with flying colors. He has carried his point and won a neat victory, in the face of what, at first, seemed to be strong odds.

At the meeting today, the investigating committee presented their report concerning the charges made against Mr. Pierce, as follows:

Your committee appointed to investigate the informal charge made by a member of the Board, Mr. Lynch, against Mr. Pierce, a teacher applying for a certificate for the grammar school course, beg leave to report. The charge was made that Mr. Pierce had published a garbled report of the Board in regard to its action in the case of Mr. Pierce. We will report that your committee made all the arrangements to meet and investigate the case fixing a day and notifying the parties interested. Your committee did meet on the day named, and before action was taken a letter was received from Mr. Lynch stating that he made the charge on information, and that it was not correct. This being the only thing that your committee had to investigate, it concluded that the charge fell through, and without hearing testimony on either side so reported to your honorable board, and with the report was another letter from Mr. Lynch which, on further consideration, he desired to have appended to this report.

The board re-referred the matter back to the committee, and the matter was continued. We have had the matter again under consideration, and have concluded that the entire matter is not of sufficient importance to call a meeting to hear evidence. There has been no formal charge made against Mr. Pierce in the board, and for the words spoken by Mr. Lynch in explanation of his vote, we are satisfied that he did so with an honesty of purpose characteristic of the man, and on good and sufficient grounds. Mr. Pierce did publish a circular headed, "retraction," thus carrying the idea that this board had retracted, when, in fact, there was no such action, as the body of his circular proved, but as he only copied his circular from a published report of the proceedings of this board in a paper, your committee recommends that the matter be dismissed and your committee be discharged.

W. C. DICKSON,
W. B. LUDLOW.

After hearing the report Director Campbell said that a motion made by him some time ago to grant the certificate, which had been laid over, would now come properly before the board.

Directors Dickson and Lynch intimated that they would vote with Director Campbell for the granting of the certificate, and this information came upon Superintendent Fisher's ears like a cyclone. He had expected to have a majority on his side of the issue. He hesitated for a moment, and then said he would now give notice that if the board took such action they would do more to weaken the hands of the supervising officer of the schools than any action ever taken by a board heretofore. For some reason, gentlemen of the board had changed their minds on the subject. He declared that he had made overtures of peace to Mr. Pierce, who had spurned them. As a matter of discipline in the schools, he thought the certificate should not be granted. It would weaken his hands, and such action would be a reproach upon the board. "Do you call this making peace? There is a peace which is purchased at a serious price, and this case is such. I have done everything that could be done by a fair-minded Superintendent."

Director Dickson who was entirely unprejudiced in the case, said that he had been placed in a false position in regard to changing his vote. When the first vote was taken he distinctly stated that he was not familiar with the case at that time and based his vote on the statements made at that time. His investigation proved to him that there is justice in the cause of Mr. Pierce, and he wanted to do what was right. He could easily account for the unfriendliness which now existed between Principal Pierce and Mr. Fisher. "You, Mr. Fisher, applied strong language to Mr. Pierce in this room. It was stirring language. If it were applied to me I could not sit quietly by and listen to such language."

"I have nothing to retract," replied Mr. Fisher. "I said what I believed was true and I have nothing to take back." Mr. Fisher again appealed to the board as fellow members not to weaken his power, and declared that all the teachers in the county were watching their action and would say: "What does this mean?"

After considerable discussion, the matter was finally brought to a vote, and Mr. Pierce was granted a certificate. Directors Campbell, Lynch and Dickson voting aye, and Director Ludlow and Secretary Fisher voting no.

Grammar Grade Certificates were granted to Fannie T. Hay, Loretta Shaw, Sadie B. Honn and Margaret Wales.

Miss Emma Smithson was granted a temporary grammar grade certificate, and the certificate of Mrs. E. L. Greggor was renewed.

L. Dupont Syle was granted a grammar school course certificate, and F. G. Harriman was recommended for an educational diploma.

The board then adjourned.

A Progress Business House. Reliable and Popular.

When a stranger visits a town or city if he wishes to ascertain the standing of the place he first acquaints himself with the leading business houses in order to be able to form a correct idea on that head. It would be so with Oakland, a stranger would look around to find the leading dry good stores, for they always lead in importance, and strange as it may appear, he would not find it on Broadway, neither would he on Washington street, but on a modest, though safe and comfortable, thoroughfare which is Thirteenth street, between the two streets named, for this is where the firm of Kennedy, Quinlan & Co. established their business nearly two years ago for with such an elegant, well assorted stock such as they carry, offered at the very closest possible prices, they thought, and it has proved true, that the Oakland public would buy their dry goods on this side of the bay. Their business commands the admiration of all. No self glorification nor buncombe, but strictly business, which coupled with being accomodating and having the right goods at the proper prices, offered for cash only. Such is the secret of the success of the leading dry goods house of Oakland. Kennedy, Quinlan & Co., 457, 459, 461 Thirteenth street, between Broadway and Washington.

According to an old adage "quality and not quantity" is what wise people want. In this connection we would call attention to the fact that the "Oakland Tea & Coffee Co.," 476 Tenth street, between Broadway and Washington street, (whose card appears elsewhere) instead of following in the work of their predecessors by charging heavy prices for their goods and giving (or pretending to give) sugar or other prizes as an inducement to draw patronage, rely solely upon the sterling quality of their goods to recommend them to an intelligent public. This company carries a full and complete assortment of teas and coffees ALWAYS FRESH and will furnish and deliver free of charge, samples to any part of the city upon application in person or by postal card addressed to their store, 476 Tenth street, between Broadway and Washington. Mr. H. R. Porter, the manager is a gentleman whose extensive and practical experience in the tea and coffee trade is a sufficient guarantee that all patrons of this establishment will be eminently well satisfied.

Selling at Cost.

Five times out of six that sign is a fraud. The public knows that selling at cost is not what the merchant is in business for. Loss puts nothing in his purse and he can't live on it. They see a bug in the water and detect a colored gentleman in the fence but about once in six times that sign is genuine. There are reasons why the questions of profit and money making are for the time minor ones. The merchant does not expect to live on loss. He has figured out loss is inevitable on a certain class of goods and has wisely concluded to make a virtue of necessity and lose voluntarily his profit rather than to be compelled to lose more. It is like a captain with a ship richly freighted; a storm comes up; the vessel labors; the chances are all will be lost; the captain orders up a part of the cargo and throws it overboard to save the rest. Just the position of the merchant. Here is a wet season. The laborer, the mechanic all thrown out of work and no money. That is now the reason of our cost price sale.

This is a genuine cost price sale. It is not of choice but necessity; not to advertise but to lessen and lighten our stock. It is a sale of goods that everybody keeping house has use for; a thousand and one different articles are offered at actual cost price at H. Schellhaas' for ten days only, our goods are not trash but a full line of parlor suits, bedroom and diningroom furniture, odd pieces of bric-a-brac, oil paintings, steel engravings, carpets, rugs and mattings, tea and dinner sets. During our sale we will give away 600 pounds of natural leaf Japan tea, "bell brand," and numerous articles of glassware. Our sales begin at 8 A. M., and close at 8 P. M. Now is the time to look and secure a bargain at H. Schellhaas,' 408 Eleventh street, near Broadway—I. O. O. F. building.

When Macbeth ironically asked, 'Canst thou minister to a mind diseased?" he little knew that mankind would one day be blessed with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In purifying the blood, this powerful alterative gives tone and strength to every function and faculty of the system.

THE PASSING SHOW

James O'Neill Becoming a One-Play Actor.

THE PLAY HOUSES AND THE PLAYERS.

Stories of the Drama, the Dramatists, and the Actors in America and Europe.

James O'Neill still plays Monte Cristo. He has two or three times tried to get out of the rut and do something else, but as often has been compelled to call up again the old favorite melodrama. In this he is an interesting example of one of the results of "combinations" and "long runs." An actor much versatility and remarkably bright promise when he was McVicker's "leading man" more than twenty years ago, he has allowed himself to become so identified with the sensational hero of Dumas' great novel that all his early promise and versatility are ignored.

O'Neill laid the foundation of his fame as a dramatic star in the city of Chicago. He first made a hit as "Bob Sackett" in Bronson Howard's comedy, Saratoga, while a member of McVicker's famous stock company in 1872. Subsequently he became leading man at Hooley's, and played a round of characters, which stamped him as one of the brightest and cleverest young actors of the period. In 1878 he attracted national attention by his wonderful performance of the leading part in "The Passion Play" at the Baldwin Theater, San Francisco. Adelaide Neilson, who was without doubt the greatest and most beautiful "Juliet" the stage ever knew, always counted O'Neill as the best of the many "Romeos" she ever played with. Mr. O'Neill's career as a star dates from 1870, when he began playing in A Celebrated Case. Next followed An American King, and then his present success, Monte Cristo, in which he has gained a splendid reputation and made a great deal of money. This is the fifth season of the play, and it still retains its wonderful drawing powers. Mr. O'Neill owns the play, and finds it good property. He will play at the Oakland Theater Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings of next week. After the O'Neill engagement the next will be of Hyde's Specialty Company, which is booked to appear here on the evenings of April 7th, 8th and 9th.

Manager Stilwell of the Oakland Theater has arranged with the Theatrical Publishing Company of San Francisco to provide a handsome eight page book programme for every performance henceforth. The programme next Monday evening will be printed on heavy paper and will be a pretty souvenir of Mr. O'Neill's engagement at the theater.

San Francisco Theaters.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendall will end their engagement at the Baldwin Theater next week. The arrangement of plays for the last week will be according to the following order: Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday matinee—Queen's Shilling. Wednesday and Thursday—Weaker Sex. Friday—By request—A Scrap of Paper.

The jolly performances of comic opera at the Bush Street Theater by the Casino Company are entitled to all the credit they receive. In Nadjy this week, Miss Emma Hanley had an opportunity to show herself. She is a light soubrette and merrily fills the part. Next week the Casino Company will play The Black Hussar.

The Bostonians will follow the Kendals at the Baldwin Theater.

Joseph R. Grismer, Miss Phoebe Davies and little Mabel Bowman will play The Burglar next week at the Alcazar.

At the Grand Opera House, Manager Rial will revive next week the original tank drama, The Dark Secret, with the water and the drenched actors.

Splinters From the Boards.

A western paper heads its dramatic column with the announcement: "Lily Clay has joined the Church."

Ullie Akerstrom is dangerously ill at Wilmington, Del., and has been compelled to cancel all her dates for the present. She was to produce her new play, A Little Busybody, at Wilmington last week.

The Chinese sniff at our drama because it deals with common people, and not with generals and emperors, while we are puzzled by Chinese drama, because it has no common humanity in it. Probably we are a little ahead of the Chinese.

A chime of ten bells has been presented by Marie C. Seguin to St. Andrew's Church (now being erected in Harlem), in memory of her mother, Mrs. Anna Seguin, the well-known opera singer, who died in August, 1888.

William J. Florence has begun writing his memoirs. They will not cover the American stage so broadly as Jefferson's, but they will deal more especially with the New York stage and its favorites, from the days of Burton, and Hamblin, and Mitchell, down to the present time.

The late Petroleum V. Nasby remarked to C. M. Skinner during an entr'acte in his Widow Bedott: "The trouble with young play-writers is that they make everything too thundering good. They work with camel's hair pencils. Now, you've got to do plays with a whitewash brush."

Henry Irving's next production will be Herman Merrivale's Master of Ravenswood, a dramatization of Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor." A London correspondent notes, by the way, a growing dissatisfaction among the Lyceum's patrons with the unvaryingly gloomy character of the plays selected by Mr. Irving for his stage.

It is said that there is not the slightest doubt about Lawrence Barrett and Edwin Booth playing together next season, although it will not be under the management of Arthur B. Chase, who retires at the end of this season. A tour of thirty weeks has already been booked, including twelve at the Broadway Theater, New York.

A new system of ticket selling, somewhat similar to that in vogue at Daly's Theater, has begun at the Casino. Purchasers of seats, instead of being given tickets, were asked for their names, and a numbered coupon was handed them, which was exchanged in the evening for their coupons. It is thought that the new system will do away entirely with ticket speculators.

Miss Letitia Aldrich, the young society lady of Washington who recently gave a matinee performance of Maid Marion in that city, is at present reading a number of plays with a view to starring next season.

Barnum's 145 ballet girls are rehearsing at his winter quarters in Bridgeport, and the girls in a paper box factory there have become so demoralized that they emulate the gymnastics of the ballet, and spend their noon hour in the seductive pursuit of high kicking. Twenty-five of them have already been discharged.

Fay Templeton has been engaged to head an opera company next season, to be known as the Templeton Comic Opera Company. The contract was made through Howell Osborne, to whom, it is said, Miss Templeton is married. Osborne is to be financially interested in the venture, and left for Europe after signing the contracts.

Frank Daniels is elated over the success which "Little Puck" is meeting with at the new Park Theater, New York. The piece is running to good business, and every one has a good word for it. The little comedian exhibits with pride a letter from Joseph Arthur, in which that gentleman says: "It is refreshing to to note the novelties as they fly. Mr. and Mrs. Sanger and Mrs. Arthur and myself agreed that yours is the most delightfully diverting, absolutely entertaining entertainment we have ever witnessed."

The introduction of afternoon performances, miscalled matinees, has been popularly ascribed to the influence of Mr. Boucicault. Those who accept and circulate this statement exhibit ignorance of the chronicles of our stage. Matinees were invented before Mr. Boucicault was heard of. They were the outcome of a New England opinion, that the Sabbath commenced at sundown on Saturday. The Boston theaters, therefore, were forbidden to give performances on Saturday night; hence the managers utilized Saturday afternoons, and matinees became a New England institution. For many years they were confined to that region.

The process by which an American manager or playwright has a drama "produced for copyright purposes" in London is an interesting one. "I have just received from London," said Edwin H. Low, "legal proof that Henry Guy Carleton's new play The Professor, was brought out there with due formality, on Saturday, February 15th. The details of such an arrangement are surprising. At least $500 worth of advertising, billing, company and theater are lavished on a performance which may not be attended by a half dozen persons, and given to satisfy the law and not the playwright. Nobody feels hurt that the house isn't crowded. In the case of The Professors," continued Mr. Low, "I received from J. M. Hill just two weeks' notice. The piece was to be produced in Albany, N. Y., on February 17th. I was, through my agents in London, to bring it out there on February 15th. I cabled the order and mailed the manuscript of the play, with instructions to put it on in first-class shape on the date named. W. E. Chapman, who used to be the London representative of the Boston Herald, got up the company and hired the St. James Theater for that night. He advertised the performance in the London newspapers, billed it about town, placarded it in front of the theater for the legal number of days preceding the 15th and got out the programmes. 'Admission to all parts of the house, one guinea,' was a significant announcement on the latter. There was a fair cast and the piece was acted out, for the first time on any stage. In accordance with the English law the following proofs of production have been mailed me: A copy of the box sheet marked with the location of the stalls sold, a balance sheet showing all the box-office receipts, a 'library account,' showing the sales by such men as Mitchell, Bubb, Oliver, Keith, etc., people who have theater ticket stands like Tyson's here, away from the theaters themselves; a copy of the advertisements, programmes and posters."

CREMATION IN GOTHAM.

Some Weird Scenes Occur at the Furnaces.

New York Star.

Cremation is becoming more common in New York. Some magnificent caskets go to the crematory, and, although they are not put into the furnace with the corpse, they have to be destroyed, as the law will not permit them to be returned, presumably for fear of spreading disease. Weird scenes occur at cremations. On one occasion, as the terrible heat struck a body just placed in the furnace, the corpse rose in a lifelike way, and then sank back to be consumed. The undertaker is not, of course, a philanthropist, but he guards many secrets, and guards them as well as either physician or lawyer.

A Great Light.

New York Star.

The invention of W. J. Norton, an Englishman, is likely to be a dangerous rival of the electric light. He has invented what is alleged to be the cheapest light ever known, and yet "a light as intense and as accurate in its illumination of colors as the sun at noonday." It is claimed that a 500 candle power light of the kind in question can be run at the nominal cost of a half penny an hour. The light consists of a peculiar tape that is fed by a simple clockwork. In point of intensity it is not surpassed by electricity, its light is much softer, and far easier to the eyes. It feeds itself, requires neither pipes, wires, or other connections, and in size may be produced from 300 to 7000 candle power. It is absolutely non-explosive, emits no smoke or objectionable vapor, is applicable to any purpose, and can be handled with as equal safety by a child as by an adult.

Sir Spencer's Soft Snap.

Louisville Courier-Journal.

When the American citizen reads that "Sir Spencer Ponsonby Fane is to become Black Rod to Queen Victoria at a salary of $10,000 and a fine house," and that "Pons will have nothing to do but draw his pay," he becomes almost reconciled to his own robber barons. Is it possible that there can be no honest government under the sun?

BEN'S BOMBSHELL.

Ben Butler's Forthcoming Literary Explosive.

SUGGESTIVE TITLES FOR BOOKS.

Dr. Henry M. Field's Popularity as an Author — The Talk of Literary Circles.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

NEW YORK, March 24th.

It looks as if General Ben Butler's forthcoming book is to be a series of explosives, and it is not unlikely that the book will prove one of the most decided literary bombshells ever published. In speaking of his book to a friend a few days ago General Butler said: "Young man, I mean to die fighting," and from his subsequent conversation it seems as if this had been his watch-word in writing the book. One of the most explosive chapters in the work will treat of Andrew Johnson, wherein some startling facts will be disclosed in connection with Mr. Lincoln's assassination. Should the facts in this one chapter be at all of a convincing character—as they are promised—they are sufficiently important to sell hundreds and thousands of copies of the book and attract world-wide attention to it. The work will be especially complete in data covering the last twenty-five years, as General Butler has preserved copies of every letter of importance which he has received and written during that period. The book will be published next autumn and it is to consist of two volumes, to be sold on the subscription plan. It will bear the imprint of Messrs. Estes & Lauriat of Boston. The title for the book has not yet been decided upon.

SUGGESTIVE TITLES FOR BOOKS.

It is not a very creditable state of affairs when it requires simply a title suggestive of uncleanliness to throw the sales of a novel into the thousands. Yet this is apparently true. I know a literary man who has the great tact of giving precisely the right title to an article or book to make it sell. I was talking with him on this topic a few days ago, and he said: "It is a burning shame that a portion of our reading public has only to see a suggestive title on a book to buy it. I know a woman who fell into the hands of one of the firms which put forth this class of books. She sent her manuscript to the firm, unconscious of the character of the house, and signed a contract with them for the publication of the story. It was a perfectly clean novel, of high moral tone; but these publishers were shrewd enough to see that, by a simple change of title, there were the elements of a fast-selling book in the manuscript. My lady friend had given the story a dignified, yet a most salable title. Imagine her surprise when she received a copy of her story under a title which made her cheeks turn crimson as she opened the parcel before a bevy of young girls. She at once wrote to the publishers for an explanation, which, when it came, was simply "that the public demanded that sort of a title," and they had renamed the book purely in the interest of the author's revenue. They were right, of course, for the book has gone through four editions of 10,000 copies each. But what point has the public taste for literature reached when it requires such unhealthy bait? It is a pleasant thought in this instance, that the 40,000 who have bought this book with the idea of finding an unclean tale have found precisely the reverse.

GRANT'S BOOK NO LONGER SELLS.

A large book jobber, who has sold hundreds if not thousands of sets of General Grant's "Memoirs," tells me that the work has at last become a drug in the literary market. "We are now selling it," he said, "at $3.25 in cloth over our counter, and there are light sales of it even at that price. We have a number of sets on hand, and my partners agree with me that they are 'dead stock.' Few books have had such long life with us as Grant's but like all others, it must have its day, and it has. Have the publishers been left with many on hand? That I cannot say for certain, but I was told, on very good authority, only a few days, ago that they were carrying something like 60,000 sets. If that is true, they will have hard work to sell them."

A NEW ENGLAND POET.

One of the many delightful women whom Mrs. Grover Cleveland has attracted to New York during the past winter is Miss Edna Dean Proctor, whose verse one continually wishes would be more generally seen in magazine literature. But Miss Proctor has an ample income of her own, is in no wise dependent upon her pen, and thus she writes only as the inspiration comes to her. As I saw this gifted writer in New York a fortnight ago she was exceedingly attractive, and I can readily understand Mrs. Cleveland's fondness for her. Her carriage is most dignified, and there is a quiet charm and elegance in her manner which at once bespeak the woman of culture and refinement. She is, I should judge, of middle age, and looks straight at you through a pair of most expressive seal-brown eyes. Her hair is steel-gray, combed back so as to show a broad, high forehead. Her dress is quiet in effect, but rich in its material. Her charities are numerous, but unostentatious. She is, in every sense, a typical New England woman. Her winters are spent with relatives in South Framingham, near Boston, while her summers are divided between her beautiful New Hampshire birthplace and the home of the poet Whittier, of whom she is an intimate friend.

DR. HENRY FIELD'S LITERARY POPULARITY.

There is a prospective interest in the announcement of a new book of travel by Dr. Henry M. Field, which he calls "Bright Skies and Dark Shadows," and is a record of the author's impressions of the Southern States, received during his trip last year. It is a new field for the author, and the book is marked by the many attractive characteristics of style and treatment that have rendered his former works so acceptable to the public. A special feature of the volume is an exhaustive discussion on the battle of Franklin. This book is, however, not the author's first venture in Southern fields. In 1880, as some readers will remember, there appeared a small volume entitled "Blood is Thicker Than Water," which detailed a description of Dr. Field's brief trip to New Orleans, and contained many interesting pictures of the new South. As a writer of travel, Dr. Field has long been a favorite with the public. It must be now about thirty-five years since he became proprietor and editor of the New York Evangelist, and shortly after his connection with the paper, began the remarkable series of letters which have rendered him so popular. His method of writing books has been usually a fragmentary one—by this I mean that he has first written and published his matter in the Evangelist, many of his letters being written from the very spot which he describes so charmingly. This, no doubt, explains the vividness of his pen pictures. When enough of these letters have appeared to form a volume, Dr. Field gathers them together, re-edits and rearranges them if necessary, and often adds much new matter. His most popular book, "From the Lakes of Killarney to the Golden Horn," is now in its eighteenth edition with the Scribners, his regular publishers, and next stands "From Egypt to Japan," in its sixteenth edition, while the other volumes have sold almost as well, considering the length of time they have been published.

THE TALK OF LITERARY CIRCLES.

I saw a copy a few days of the limited edition of a selection of Tennyson's poems, in which the poet laureate has, on the fly leaf, appended his autograph. The poet's distaste for writing his autograph is manifested even in this official instance, as in many of the copies his name is written in a scratchy careless manner. The book is beautifully made and superbly illustrated, but then it commands a beautiful and superb price, i. e., $60 a copy.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer is reading the proofs of a new novel which the Harpers will publish. The authoress—for such she is, alas! Custer's widow may now be called—is also writing a serial story of life on the plains for boys.

I regret that in one of my recent letters the types made me refer to "a Mrs. S. A. Bigelow" as collaborateur with Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson in a volume of American sonnets. Mrs. Bigelow is a lady well known in Boston and all through the East for her gracious hospitality to young authors and artists, and more prominent in literary circles than one might infer from the "Mrs." which the compositor made me use.

A book on the home life and personal side of Browning is to come from the pen of Mrs. Sutherland Orr, who was one of the dead poet's most intimate friends. The Browning family is to furnish new material for the volume.

Robert Louis Stevenson's popularity continues—in England, at any event, where the six-teenth edition of his last story, "The Master of Ballantrae," is announced. In America the book has not reached such a sale, although two good editions of the novel have been sold.

Here is more "Stanley news": The manuscript of the explorer's magazine article has reached New York, and is to be published in the June Scribner's, of which an extra edition will be printed to meet the expected demand. For the book the Scribners are said to have already in hand orders for 50,000 copies. The price of the book has been fixed at $3.50 for the two volumes.

Mrs. Mary J. Holmes is probably the most indefatigable traveler among women authors. It is only recently that she returned from a year's trip, which extended almost around the world, while now the lady is about to embark for Alaska, where she will spend the entire summer, accompanied by her husband.
